

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

by PETER J. SHAW

GLIMMEN, The Netherlands (UPI) — Dutch troops backed by Starfighter jets stormed a hijacked train and an elementary school to end the ordeal of 55 hostages who had been held by Moluccan gunmen for 20 days.

As the firing ceased, some of the hostages aboard the train were seen walking to waiting ambulances.

The attack began at dawn and heavy machine gun fire could be heard along with the boom of heavier weapons as the jets roared overhead.

THE ATTACK followed the breakdown of attempts by Moluccan mediators to negotiate a settlement with the gunmen who are seeking the independence of their island homeland from Indonesia and have demanded a getaway plane, and the release of 21 Moluccan prisoners.

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come from within the train. However, the four-coach express remained intact.

There were no immediate reports of casualties but stretchers were taken directly to the train.

The use of jets and mortars with what seemed to be blank ammunition apparently was meant to intimidate and confuse the gunmen. At least six F104 Starfighter jets crisscrossed above the train at a height of no more than 50 feet, their afterburners glowing red in the deep blue morning light.

The first plane streaked straight down the tracks toward the train and barely cleared the roof.

THE ASSAULT came as a complete surprise. There had been heavy military movement during the night, but this died down as dawn approached, and no one expected an attack once it was already getting light.

Marines with blackened faces appeared out of the dense mist rolling across the flat pastureland to launch the assault.

There was heavy machinegun fire, then the planes appeared and a series of booms was heard.

After a short lull, three bright flashes were seen inside the train but there was no sound. The only sign of damage to the train seemed to be broken windows.

Less than an hour after the attack, streams of ambulances began ferrying survivors to a special medical reception post at the Academic Hospital at Groningen. They traveled a long road cleared of all traffic.

At the school, at least four armored cars were engaged in the assault and automatic weapons fire was heard. Marines were later seen at the school raising their fists in a gesture of victory and shouting, "Hurray, hurray."

After about 10 minutes the action appeared to have died down. Reporters and photographers at other vantage points said the train seemed undamaged and they did not think there was any shooting inside the carriages.

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Ray escapes from prison

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI)—James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, broke out of the maximum security Brushy Mountain prison in a hall of gunfire Friday night, triggering a massive manhunt.

A spokesman in the governor's office at Nashville said Ray and six other men "went over the wall" at about 8 p.m. EDT.

"The escape occurred during the evening recreation period," according to Brooks Parker, a spokesman for Gov. Ray Blanton.

"THE PRISONERS escaped using a homemade ladder made out of lighting conduit (wire). One has been captured and there are still six at large. One of them is James Earl Ray."

The one recaptured was injured as he went over the wall. Bank robber Jerry Ward was shot by guards and taken to Oak Ridge Hospital.

FBI agents, not waiting for an invitation, rushed to the fortress-like prison buried in the Tennessee mountains 40 miles northeast of Knoxville near Oak Ridge.

"Warden Davis informs me that the search underway is made up of 125 correctional officers, 10 highway patrolmen, two FBI men on the scene, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation agents and local law enforcement officers from Morgan County," said Parker.

"AT THE PRESENT time, prison bloodhounds are in pursuit of three of the six escapees. The warden is having a standby team of dogs brought in."

King was felled by a single shot as he stood on the balcony of the Larraume Motel in Memphis, Tenn., on the evening of April 4, 1968.

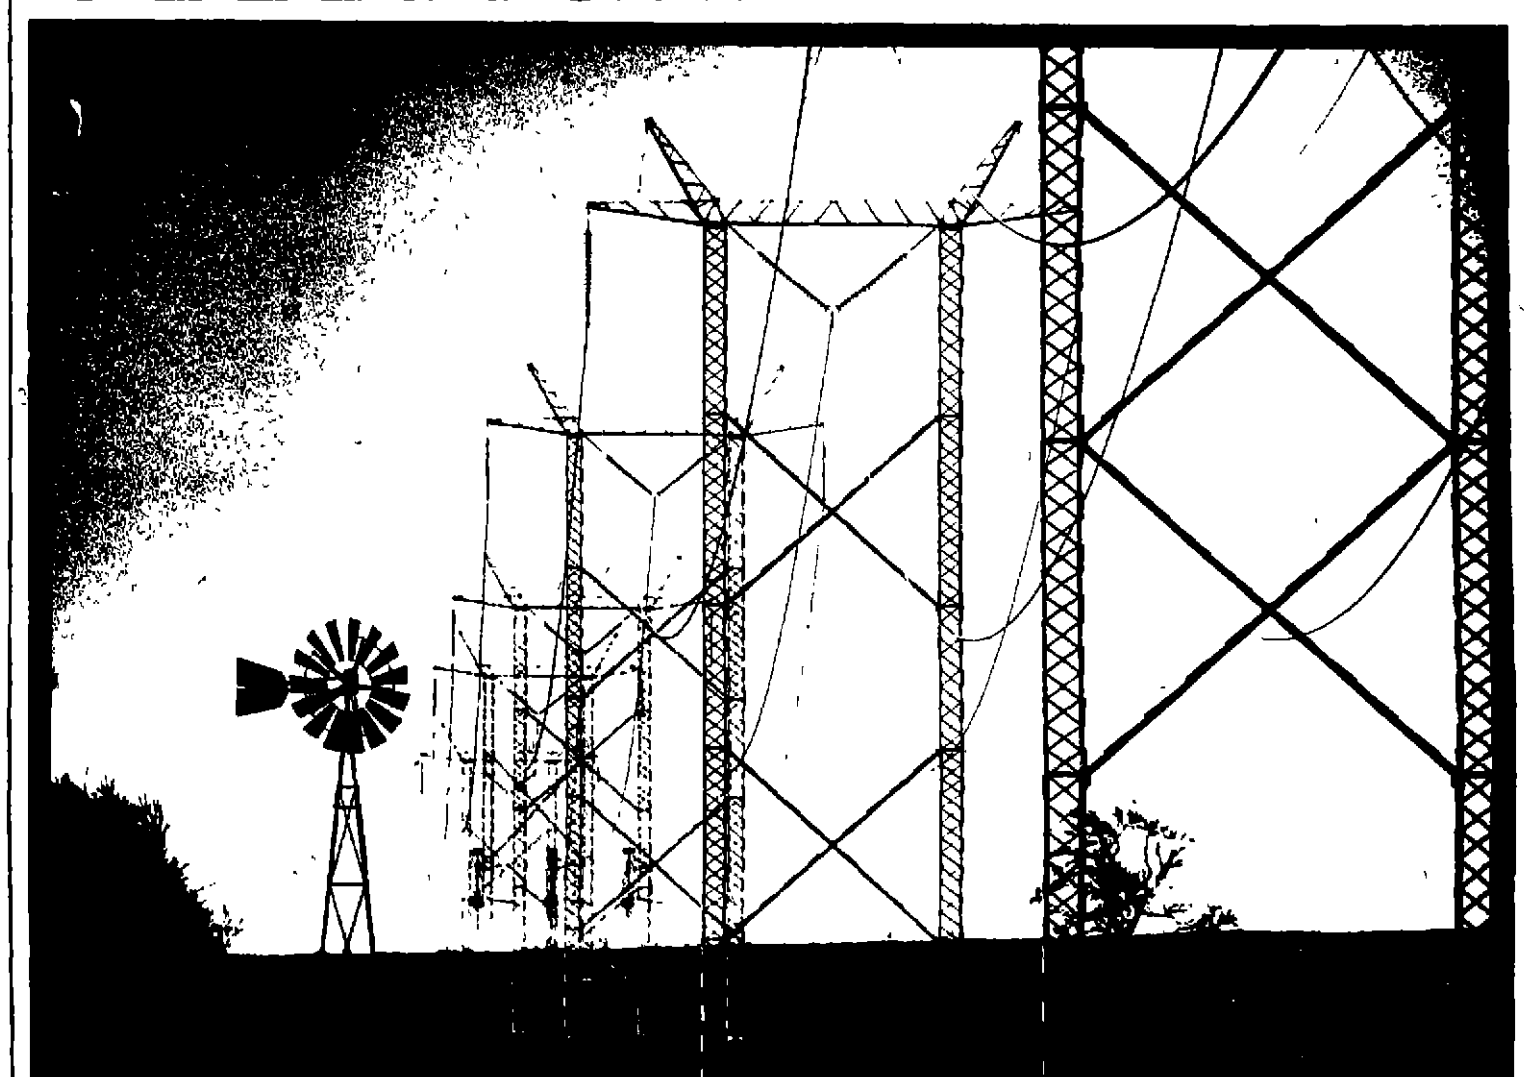

An intensive manhunt soon focused on Ray, then a fugitive from the Missouri State Prison. He was arrested at London's Heathrow Airport on June 8.

On March 10, 1969, after shuffling through several attorneys and winding up with noted defense lawyer Percy Foreman, Ray entered a guilty plea and was sentenced to 99 years. There was no testimony.

Almost from the moment he entered prison, Ray began protesting his conviction, saying his attorneys railroaded him. He claimed he was working for a man named "Raoul," who he thought was a gunrunner, and had been set up to take the blame for the killing.

The government claimed he killed King with a rifle aimed through the bathroom window of a flophouse. The rifle was found in a bag by the door of the building.

Ray's efforts for a new trial were rejected by one court after another, although there were many unexplained facets to the case such as where he got the money to flee to, and around, Europe after the killing.

WINDMILLS WERE bringing power to the Midwest long before electrical power lines were installed. And before that they were used to pump water on farms. Today's wind generators are slimmer and many are mounted on rooftops. They aren't a common sight yet, but many people say the winds are one source of power that will have to be tapped.

Search for energy tilts to windmills

by LYNN ASINOF

A lot of people chuckled when Illinois Schools Supt. Joseph Cronin suggested that state schools might someday be powered by windmills.

But a visit to Plum Brook, Ohio would make the chucklers think twice. There stands the country's largest wind generator, with twin blades 125 feet across. It can produce 100 kilowatts of electricity when the wind blows at 18 miles per hour.

Built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation in 1975, the wind generator is considered a first step.

IT IS PART of the government's push to explore the use of large wind generators to produce low-cost electricity. The Energy Research and Development Administration estimates that wind will provide 1,000 megawatts of electricity by the year 1985, equivalent to 0.5 per cent of the nation's total projected energy needs.

In the next two years, the government will build four large machines. This year alone, it will spend $20.5 million on windpower research, and 30 per cent of that will be spent on large wind generators.

But most people probably will feel the effects of windpower from another direction — the small wind generators mounted on rooftops.

That's the approach taken by the 11th Street Movement in New York City, a low income neighborhood group that has rebuilt a burned-out tenement.

WITH A government grant, the group installed a $4,000 windmill that can produce 2,000 watts of electricity an hour. That's not enough to power the entire building, but it will produce enough to cut the electric bill for common areas of the building by one-third.

The 11th Street Movement bought a rebuilt Jacobs windmill from Windworks, a technological community 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. It is one big source of information on windpower systems.

Harnessing the sun and wind

Started in 1970 under the direction and sponsorship of R. Buckminster Fuller, Windworks began experimenting with simple wind machines for the homebuilder.

"The homebuilding approach was fine as an educational tool,"

Solar heat energy wave of the future

Solar energy is a boom business. Small companies have sprouted like weeds bearing names like Sunworks, Mr. Sun, Solar-Aire and Helio-Dynamics.

Many of the companies have put lots of research into their product, others are fly-by-nighters. But all are anxious to cash in on the new alternative energy campaign, and many are finding they can't handle all the business coming their way.

Just ask Stephen Miller, who founded Amcon Inc., a Carbondale firm that produces complete solar air systems. Just 1½-year-old, Amcon was started because Miller couldn't find the equipment he needed on the market.

"I WAS A contractor and we had some clients come in wanting to have a solar home built," Miller said. "We took a look at what was on the market. That was in 1973-74. Then we set about to design our own system."

Today Miller says he can't keep up with the business. "We're by no means set up to handle the influx of inquiries we have right now," he said, noting he's gotten letters from every state in the U.S., not to mention a string of foreign countries including Liberia, Germany and Israel.

The solar industry is doubling in size every nine months based on the amount of solar collector plates sold, said Sheldon Butt, president of the Solar Energy Industries Assn. But the industry is still in its infancy and Butt says there will be many changes before it stabilizes.

Right now, most solar industries are small businesses. Butt said that creates built-in problems since the companies often don't have needed organizational or marketing skills.

"LARGELY WHAT you find today is the founder of a company is a good technical man who sat down and designed himself a good product and now he doesn't know what to do with it," Butt said.

Although there is a tremendous market for solar products, often the solar companies have a hard time getting their product in the public eye. They don't have enough time to develop good public relations, and that is one reason why it is hard to get information on solar products.

The Federal Energy Administration publishes a list of companies active in solar energy, but Butt points out that the FEA often has trouble finding the smaller companies.

Buyers rare for Dist. 25 empty schools

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Arlington Heights Dist. 25 seems to be coming up short of tenants and buyers for its two empty schools closed because of declining enrollment.

School officials had hoped to sell North School and move its tenants, the Northwest Opportunity Center and Summit School for exceptional children, to Wilson School, but nothing has been going according to plan.

First, no bidders showed up for the June 4 auction of North School, 410 N. Arlington Heights Rd. Then Monday, the Arlington Heights Zoning Board of Appeals voted 3-1 to deny the Northwest Opportunity Center's request to relocate to Wilson School, 15 E. Palatine Rd.

A FINAL decision on the matter must come from the Arlington Heights Village Board.

"We're disappointed to say the least," Nicholas Raino, board of education president, said. "It's unfortunate that we're going to have two schools only partially full."

While school officials are unhappy about the decision, residents in the Wilson area are not. Fifteen neighborhood homeowners attended Monday's zoning board meeting to protest the center's relocation because of the traffic and parking problems they believe it would cause.

Raino said the center will be allowed to remain at North School until the Dist. 25 Board decides what al-

The high cost of fuel has forced Americans to search for cheaper means of providing energy. Some people are experimenting with ways to harness the limitless supply of wind and sun. Herald reporter Lynn Asinof visited New York City and Vermont to find out how the experiments are progressing. The first of her two reports begins today.

Gasoline leak disrupts Zion

A gasoline leak forced an 11-hour evacuation of one-and-a-half blocks of downtown Zion Friday, as a leaking pipeline at a service station poured the flammable liquid into the ground under the street. Firefighters and repair crews located the leak, in a pipeline from a storage tank to a gasoline pump, and sealed off the pipeline. They then flooded the area with water to bring the gasoline to the surface. The gasoline then was pumped into a field, where it was neutralized. Fifteen persons were evacuated from an apartment building housing a barber shop and a beauty parlor. Gasoline had been leaking into the basement. Authorities said residents would not be allowed to return until today.

Goldblatt's may return to Plaza

Goldblatt Department Store officials Friday said they are planning to build a store in the Mount Prospect area to replace the store destroyed last February at the Mount Prospect Plaza, Rand and Central roads. A spokesman said the firm is considering several sites in the area, but has not ruled out rebuilding at the plaza. The owners of the other stores at the shopping center are concerned that the permanent loss of the department store will affect them. They say that without a large store to draw customers their sales will be hurt.

Park Forest to celebrate Sunday

Park Forest residents plan a massive celebration Sunday because of the South suburb's designation as an all-America city in 1977. Officials said Sen. Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill., and many area officials plan to attend the ceremonies at the Park Forest Plaza.

Herald political editor opens new state bureau

Steven E. Brown, political editor of Paddock Publications, has been appointed the newspaper's first full-time Springfield correspondent.

The Herald's new state capital bureau will provide coverage of Illinois government as well as Downstate affairs for the Paddock Corporation's nine daily and six weekly newspapers.

Brown has covered the Illinois legislature for The Herald since November 1975 through regular visits to Springfield.

He joined the newspaper as a reporter in 1971, was named assistant city editor in 1974 and assignment editor in 1975; he has been political editor since 1976. Brown is a 1970 graduate of Southern Illinois University School of Journalism.

'Jaws' ate good before demise

ICKHAM, England (UPI) — He wasn't exactly the great white shark or the Loch Ness monster, but Britain's hungriest fish gave his trackers a run for their money.

"Jaws," the nickname given the mysterious predator who ate 3,000 goldfish in a local pond, had become something of a national joke.

The pond's owner determined to rid himself of the voracious fish. Jaws outwitted everyone.

He survived attempts to net him, hook him on a line, shoot him, even blow him up. An army squad entered the spirit of the hunt and set off two explosive charges in the pond, blowing up a lot of water — but not Jaws.

"I know that fish is in there somewhere," said Alf Leggatt, 60, who owns the pond.

Friday, Leggatt called in two officials from the Southern Water Authority who rowed out and shot surges of high voltage electricity into the water.

After a while, Jaws floated to the surface — dead as any large perch could be.

HEW to wage all-out fight against cigaret smoking

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Health, Education and Welfare Sec. Joseph A. Califano Jr., who gave up smoking a year ago, is planning to put his department behind a "vigorous" anti-cigaret campaign, it was disclosed Friday.

The disclosure was made by Rep. L. H. Fountain, D-N.C., who wrote a letter to Califano urging him to drop the plan, saying "as of today there is no conclusive laboratory or clinical evidence that cigarettes cause any human diseases for which they have been statistically related."

The issue was raised by Dr. Sidney Wolfe, head of Ralph Nader's Health Research Group, who wrote Califano a letter asking him to take a personal stand to help wipe out subsidies for tobacco growers, which Wolf said amount to as much as $85 million a year.

WOLFE SAID there was a conflict between the government supporting tobacco on the one hand and warning the public against its health effects on the other.

The Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare operates a clearing house to disseminate information on smoking hazards.

Califano, in a return letter to Wolfe, said that as long as he was secretary he would take "vigorous action to highlight the health effects of smoking."

Senate passes bill delaying tailpipe controls

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Friday passed legislation giving auto makers until 1980 to achieve exhaust pollution standards they were supposed to have met last year.

The vote was 73 to 7. The bill goes to the House, which also has passed similar legislation.

The bill would extend for the fourth time the 1976 deadline for tighter controls on auto tailpipe pollutants that was originally set in the Clean Air Act of 1970.

The bill, similar to one killed by a Senate filibuster last year, also would make major changes in other parts of the 1970 act.

However, the Senate measure calls for stronger auto exhaust controls and higher standards for protecting existing air quality in national parks, wilderness areas, and rural areas whose air still is relatively pure.

While accepting minor changes in a bill approved by his Senate environment subcommittee, Sen. Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, rebuffed most weakening amendments as debate drew to a close.

One by Sen. William Scott, R-Va., all but eliminating so-called nondegradation standards in areas that still have clean air, lost 70 to 17.

Under the bill, permits would be required for new plants that might pollute areas with nondegradation standards — which call for holding pollution far below minimum health standards.

"The nondegradation concept establishes a no-growth policy for the country that could retard further economic development," Scott said.

JOSEPH CALIFANO

He also said he would ask the new assistant secretary for health for a "detailed plan to help reduce smoking" and "the health implications of the current government programs to assist" the industry should be "carefully evaluated."

Wolfe said he was happy Califano was doing something but "it's nowhere near enough . . . it's an inadequate response as far as I'm concerned."

FOUNTAIN, HOWEVER, said the exchange of correspondence was a danger signal for the tobacco industry.

"What is needed is full, free and informal scientific discussion, not propaganda from any of the agencies of government or any quasipublic organizations such as the American Cancer Society," he told Califano.

"The economics of tobacco should by no means be equated with any alleged health effects, but it should be realized that the destruction of the tobacco industry can only bring down on the heads of those responsible the plight of a poor section of this country equal only to their plight following the war between the states," he added.

Fountain said an end to the tobacco support program would put 600,000 to 800,000 farm families on welfare.

Experts attempt to link evidence to Patty, Frank

by DAVE IBATA

Three criminologists testified Friday in an attempt by prosecutors to link physical evidence in the Columbo murders to Patricia Columbo and Frank DeLuca.

Robert A. Cabanne, a handwriting specialist at the Illinois Bureau of Identification, said Miss Columbo "definitely" wrote floor plans of her family's home, at 55 E. Brantwood Dr., Elk Grove Village, and a dossier of family activities.

Michael A. Podlecki, also of the bureau, testified a strand of brown hair recovered from the body of Miss Columbo's 13-year-old brother, Michael, is "89.9 per cent" similar to Miss Columbo's.

BLAIR SCHULTZ, also a criminologist at the bureau, said a piece of glass recovered from the car Miss Columbo rented and was driving when the murders occurred May 4, 1976, matches broken glass found at the murder scene.

The three evidence specialists testified at the trial of Miss Columbo, 20, and DeLuca, 39. The defendants are being tried for the murders of Miss Columbo's parents, Frank and Mary Columbo, and their son.

Cabanne said he compared handwriting samples given by Miss Columbo with handwriting on the floor plans and dossier.

Podlecki said he compared hair samples taken from Miss Columbo and DeLuca, samples taken from the bodies of Frank and Mary Columbo, and two strands of hair found on the bloody T-shirt of Michael Columbo.

Podlecki said a single hair taken from the top of Miss Columbo's head was very similar to one of the strands found on Michael's body.

He said the odds of such a similarity between hairs taken from two different people was 4,500 to 1.

Schultz said he analyzed 25 fragments of glass taken from Miss Columbo's rented car, and found one that matched one of dozens of glass fragments from the Columbo house. However, under cross-examination, Schultz said the fragment from the car could be matched to millions of other particles of glass outside the home.

Lobbies cripple energy bill: Powell

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress succumbed to extensive auto and oil lobbying which gutted President Carter's energy plan and will cause a "$71 billion ripoff of the American consumer," the President's chief spokesman charged Friday.

"The people of this country will be the ones who suffer if our hopes for an energy plan are thwarted," Press Sec. Jody Powell said, noting he was speaking for Carter. "They will be the ones who will pay for the special interest victories."

Carter reacted angrily a day after House panels rejected his rebate for fuel efficient cars, rejected a standby gasoline tax, weakened a tax for "gas-guzzler" cars and voted to deregulate natural gas immediately.

POWELL SAID Carter is "condemned" to the energy crisis. He repeatedly said it is now up to Capitol Hill to offer alternatives.

"It is his feeling . . . the oil companies and automobile companies and their lobbies won significant preliminary victories," Powell said referring to the President. "These two lobbies have been winning victories year after year after year."

"It is certainly not the first time in recent history when they have indeed been successful in having their interests prevail, even when they are contrary to those of the American people," said Powell.

"The President feels the unnecessary action to deregulate natural gas is particularly serious. That action, if it finally becomes law, will cost the American consumer $71 billion over the next eight years."

Powell said he based his figures on the estimated increase in the cost of natural gas over the next eight years of $86 billion, minus the estimated $15 billion cost of the Carter plan for a phased deregulation.

SHELTER, INC.'S proposed foster home for teen-aged boys at 523 W. Algonquin Rd., Arlington Heights, will be the first of its kind in the area. The house will be able to handle up to five boys for a maximum of 21 days and will be staffed by permanent house parents.

Shelter hopes to convert house to boys' foster home

by KEN VANDERBEEK

The rambling ranch house at 523 W. Algonquin Rd., Arlington Heights, looks like any other house from the outside — but Shelter, Inc. has plans.

Shelter, a child welfare agency, wants to lease the seven-room house from Kanematsu-Gosho, Inc. and convert it into the area's first foster home. Temporary living quarters for as many as five boys, ages 11 to 17, who have been neglected or need supervision are planned.

Plans for the foster home, which will be funded by the Illinois Law Enforcement Agency, were approved Monday by the village zoning board and go the village board for final approval June 20.

"Then, as soon as we get adequate insurance protection for the house, our staff can think about moving in. We'd like to open it by July 1," said Susan Roberts, president of Shelter.

SHELTER HAS HIRED Richard Atwater and his wife, Patricia, of Inverness, to serve as group home parents in the house.

"Our attitude will be that the kids are our own. We will do as much as we can to make them feel at home," said Atwater, who is employed at The Bridge, a youth service agency in Palatine.

A staff coordinator from Shelter, not yet hired, will aid the Atwaters and work from an office in the house.

Mrs. Roberts said the house staff will not conduct therapeutic treatment, mainly because of lack of time. Boys will live at the house for a maximum of 21 days.

THE FOSTER HOME will supplement Shelter's current program that places children with volunteer foster parents in private homes.

"Transiency has hurt the regular volunteer program. Some foster parents have recently moved away. With the house though, the Atwaters will act as full-time parents and a foster service will be satisfied around the clock."

Mrs. Roberts said the boys who are referred to Shelter will be interviewed before they live in the house.

"If it appears that a foster home would be better, we may place the child there," she said. "This house will be used only for temporary assistance. We cannot handle cases such as those which involve abused children."

SHE SAID EXAMPLES such as child-parent conflict or "the situation where a boy's mother is temporarily hospitalized," will warrant a child's placement in the house.

"Essentially, this house will provide a place for cooling off," Pat Beck, acting director of Shelter, said. "Many of these boys will already be involved in things — either at school or in a job — so they'll have freedoms like any teen-ager to grow."

"We'd appreciate if the community would donate such things as a pool table, picnic table and other things that these boys might be interested in," Mrs. Beck said. New or close to new items should be referred to Judy Lahey, in charge of community services at Shelter.

The agency, a recipient of last year's award from Voluntary Action Center, Chicago, for its foster parent programs, has provided temporary care for neglected or dependent children since 1975. In the last three years it has found homes for more than 115 needy boys and girls.

Mrs. Roberts said more and more foster parent volunteers still are needed.

"Most of our foster parents have been young without their own kids," she said. "Sometimes they have felt like they don't have enough expertise to offer the teen-aged children. But if we could have more foster families take in boys, a foster home like the one on Algonquin Road could more greatly meet the needs of its own children."

4 Britons make a crowd: Amin

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) —

Uganda's President Idi Amin threatened Friday to execute an Englishman within days if found guilty of spying and ordered his troops to jail all Britons seen meeting or traveling in groups of more than three.

The restrictions, which diplomats said were the harshest ever meted against foreigners by Amin's regime, followed by two days an order barring the 300 Britons still living in Uganda from leaving the country.

In London, a Foreign Office spokesman said it had been "in touch" with its mission at the French Embassy in Uganda but that "it is unlikely that there will be any comment about the so-called 'news items' on Radio Uganda."

"THERE'S NO POINT in our doing so (commenting)," the spokesman said. "We are in touch with our mission there. And those Britons who are there — after we broke off diplomatic relations with Uganda last summer — know the score full well."

Earlier, Uganda radio said that another Briton arrested on spying charges would be executed and secretly buried within a week if he is found guilty.

A Uganda military spokesman later went on the radio and announced that Britons must not "gather in groups of more than three. Neither are they permitted to travel in groups of more than three in one car."

"IF THEY ARE FOUND" contravening this rule they will be arrested by the security forces and put into the nearest military or other prison," the announcement said.

"The government is taking this matter seriously and the security forces should watch the imperialists movements and activities very seriously," it said.

Diplomatic sources in Nairobi said all the moves against the Britons — the travel and meeting ban as well as refusal to allow them to leave Uganda — were obvious retaliation measures taken by Amin for being barred from the current Commonwealth conference in London.

"This means that a man can't take his wife and two children to the movies without being arrested," one East African diplomat said. "These are the most severe restrictions placed on foreign residents in recent Ugandan history."

Soda truckers settle strike; OK 2-year pact

Cook County residents will be able to quench their thirsts with their favorite bottled soft drink today as the result of a two-year contract approved Friday by Chicago area soda truck drivers and helpers.

Although deliveries will be sporadic today, by Monday all regular delivery trucks will be back on the streets, Glenn Buckley, senior vice president of Pepsi-Cola General Bottlers, Chicago.

"We are delighted," Buckley said Friday. "It was a two week strike that we're happy is concluded."

The new contract between Chicago Bottlers of Carbonated Beverages and the 1,300 members of Teamsters Local 744 will mean increases ranging from $1,200 to $1,500 for driver-salesmen.

The contract calls for the drivers' $111 per week base salary to remain the same while commissions per case would increase from 21 cents per case to 22.5 cents. Effective May 1, 1978 case commissions will increase another penny.

An average route is between 30,000 and 100,000 cases delivered annually, an industry spokesman said, with drivers earning between $24,000 and $28,500 under the new contract, including base pay.

Helpers will receive a $5 per week salary increase to $153. Their bonus will rise from 8 cents per case to 8 cents, with 1.5 cents added May 1, 1979.

Health, pension, and welfare benefits also will increase for drivers and helpers.

A spokesman for Coca Cola Bottling Co. of Chicago said deliveries of Coke could start today. Stores should have normal supplies by Monday, he said.

The new contract will mean added costs for local bottlers, Buckley said. "Any time you have increased costs you have to think about its impact on prices," he said, adding that there are no immediate plans for price changes.

During the strike, consumers were able to purchase supplies of soft drinks supplied by bottlers not affected by the work stoppage. In some stores, the soft drink supplies dwindled, while other stores reported adequate supplies. The teamsters Local 744 strike affected 1,300 drivers for Coca Cola, Pepsi-Cola, Canada Dry and Seven-Up beverages sold in the county.

Drivers who want to work Saturday will be on the job, said Bob Sesniak, a sales representative at the Canada Dry offices in Maywood. Sesniak said all regular soft drink deliveries will start Monday.

The Friday vote on the new contract was 690 to 218, reported Peter Thomas, secretary of Local 744.

The new contract agreement was reached in a Tuesday bargaining session. In addition to Local 744 and bottling company representatives, the session included federal mediator Sam Mazza of Palatine.

Love grows under the Golden Arches

Kathy Svehla knew her love was her to stay when she checked her hamburger and found an engagement ring between the pickles and the relish. Saturday she will become Mrs. Herb Wilson and she and the groom will hurry to the "Golden Arches" where their romance blossomed, the McDonald's hamburger stand at 6900 S. Ogden Avenue in suburban Berwyn. It was there, four years ago, that Kathy and Herb happened to bring their big Macs to the same table. Kathy and Herb, both 21, will be married at the Warren Park Presbyterian Church in nearby Cicero at 4:30 p.m. and head directly for their old trysting place for another hamburger.

Woman charged in house fire

A woman was charged Friday with setting a fire that killed two young brothers and their 14-year-old aunt in their home earlier Friday. Geraldine Walker, 24, was charged with one count of arson and three counts of murder for allegedly setting the fire early Friday after a quarrel over a man with the boy's mother, Louise Fairley, 24, police said. The blaze erupted in the stairway of the frame home and trapped Lamont Fairley, 1, his brother, Spence, 4, and their aunt, Florine Fairley, in their beds.

Three at party shot by gunmen

Three persons, including a 5-year-old girl, were wounded Friday by three gunmen who invaded a housing project card party, police said. The wounded were Martina Simon, 5, shot in the chest, thigh and leg; Thekla Teape, 40, shot in the arm; and Ethel Robinson, shot in the leg. Police said they were unable to determine whether any money was taken or what other motive the gunmen might have had.

Multiyear plates closer to reality

Illinois cars could be sporting multiyear license plates by 1979 under a bill overwhelmingly approved by the Senate Friday. The Senate voted, 55-1, for H381, which has passed the House and is backed by Sec. of State Alan J. Dixon. Zale Glauberman, aide to Gov. James R. Thompson, said the governor has not decided if he will sign the bill. The measure would allow the secretary to issue plates for more than one year beginning in 1979. The Senate sponsor, Sen. James Donnewald, D-Breese, said multiyear plates would save the state $20 million over five years.

State patronage chief resigns

Gov. James R. Thompson said Friday he accepted the resignation of his patronage chief for flying state planes for personal and political reasons because "you can't alter state records, no matter how small the principle involved." The governor said 24-year-old Michael Dunn of Rockford offered to quit at a private meeting with Thompson. "He was a good, decent kid trying to do a dirty, rotten job," he said. "He had two problems. He wanted to please everybody and he was an airplane nut. He let that overcome his better judgement. You just can't alter state records, no matter how small the principle involved," Thompson said. The governor named his chief legislative liaison, Zale Glauberman, to succeed Dunn temporarily. James Helm will handle day-to-day patronage chores and answer to Glauberman.

Judge Sirica orders Gould to pay itself $200,000

by ROBERT KYLE

It began more than two years ago with a corporate decision to expand. It ended this week in a Washington, D.C., courtroom when U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica ordered top officials of Gould Inc., to sell a 32-acre tract in Rolling Meadows and to pay at least $200,000 to their own company, even if it means taking money from their own pockets.

Along the way came a complex real estate deal where four Gould officials, their attorney and their real estate agent used a "straw person" to inflate the price of a piece of land sold to the company while reducing the price of a tract they bought for themselves.

suming, expensive litigation and delay."

From the company's headquarters in Rolling Meadows, publicist Marianna Durk said there will be no discipline for the employees involved in the transaction.

"They didn't do anything wrong," she said. "The only thing was the failure to disclose."

The SEC also aimed its complaint against the failure of Ylvisaker and Gould financial vice president Edwin C. Parker to tell the company's board of directors about their dealings. The agency's complaint simply outlines the facts of the land deals, facts, an attorney says, that will never be tested in court.

In January 1975 Ylvisaker instructed Illinois Development Corp., Gould's real estate agent, to negotiate for a seven-acre triangle on the south side of the Northwest Tollway at Golf Road. The triangle was part of a 39-acre tract — the rest lies north of the tollway.

IDC OFFERED $280,000 at first, then $300,000, then $325,000 and finally $350,000, the price determined by an appraiser hired by the owners.

The owners were ready to accept that price only if Gould provided access to the lanlocked 32-acre parcel north of the tollway. Negotiations came to an impasse over the question of access in September 1975.

In December IDC told Gould that the easiest way to acquire the seven-acre triangle was to buy the entire 39 acres for $1.4 million. IDC then recommended that Gould sell the property north of the tollway to finance the entire deal.

William D. Sanders, IDC president, told Ylvisaker in January that the land was worth more than $1.4 million. Sometime around the first of March, Sanders and Ylvisaker began talking about buying the 32-acre tract as an investment of their own.

IDC THEN AGREED to buy the entire 39-acre tract through a "straw person" who was to divide the land between Gould and a newly formed group called the "Algonquin Road Partners" — Ylvisaker, financial vice president Parker, Gould president Daniel Carroll, another unidentified Gould officer, attorney Thomas A. Reynolds Jr. and seven IDC employees.

The SEC does not know it, but the new partnership jelled at about the same time that the City of Rolling Meadows, at IDC's urging, solved the problem of access to the 32-acre tract.

It was in December 1975 or January 1976 that IDC first approached the city about using a city-owned easement running south from Algonquin Road, recalls City Engineer James J. Muldowney. In April, the city council agreed to build a street and a bridge if the developer paid the $185,000 cost.

The SEC does know that the deal began to fall into place in May when a bank approved "more than 100 per cent financing" for the land.

GOULD ENDED UP paying $940,000 for the seven-acre triangle that had been appraised at $350,000. Instead of the appraised price of $1 million, the new partnership paid $460,000 for its 32 acres.

Immediately, the partnership put that parcel on the market for three times the purchase price.

In July, the SEC says, Gould's planning manager, Jack E. Jackson, voiced his concern that the firm may have paid too much for its land. For the second time, Gould president Carroll urged that Ylvisaker explain the transaction to Gould's directors.

The directors did not learn of the transaction, though, until August when Ylvisaker sent them a "misleading" letter that said the partnership had paid the appraised price for its land.

THE SEC'S LAST entry is dated Oct. 15, 1976: the Algonquin Road Partners offered to sell the land to Gould's directors for $460,000. At the same time, Ylvisaker, in his capacity as chairman and chief executive officer, recommended that the offer be refused.

Mrs. Durk and planning manager Jackson said the SEC complaint will have no impact on the firm's plans to build a new 10-story building near the tollway.

The future of the 32-acre parcel is not as clear. IDC originally had talked about luring a large corporation to the site. City Engineer Muldowney says he's seen plans for a residential subdivision.

But, in addition to extracting a promise that Gould, Ylvisaker and financial vice president Parker will adhere to the SEC's disclosure regulations, Sirica's order says that the Algonquin Road Partners must sell their land.

Gould is to receive at least $200,000 of the proceeds, the agreement says, even if that means a loss for the partnership. If the land is sold at a profit, all of the profit must go to Gould. According to the agreement the partnership is to receive no more than the $460,000 they paid for the land.

St. Simon's parish picnic

St. Simon's Episcopal Church will hold its annual parish picnic following the 10 a.m. worship service Sunday. The picnic will be held at Schmidt Park, adjacent to the church's east parking lot, 717 Kirchhoff Rd., Arlington Heights.

Those attending are asked to bring their own food and beverage, lawn furniture and outdoor grills.

Blood drive set Sunday

The Christian Church, 333 W. Thomas St., Arlington Heights, will hold its SureBlood drive from noon to 2 p.m. Sunday. Area residents are invited to join church members in donating a pint of blood. Donors should contact blood chairman, Kay Farklaris, 255-1799, to schedule an appointment.

If you are in good health, weigh at least 110 pounds and are between the ages of 17 and 65, you can be a volunteer donor.

The Cross and Crown Church, 1122 W. Rand Rd., Arlington Heights, also has scheduled a SureBlood drive from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m. June 26. Ed Frega, church blood chairman, urges area residents to join parishioners by calling 394-4545 to schedule an appointment to donate blood.

If you are in good health, between the ages of 17 and 65, and weigh more than 110 pounds, you can be a volunteer blood donor.

Parks offer sports clinic

A sports and activities clinic for boys and girls in grades three through eight is being offered by the Arlington Heights Park District. The clinic has been designed to teach the basic rules and strategies of soccer, basketball, tennis, tumbling, trampoline, volleyball, floor hockey and softball.

The clinic runs Monday through Friday for two weeks with the third to fifth graders meeting from 9 a.m. to noon and the sixth to eighth graders meeting from 12:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The clinic will be at Frontier Park, June 13-24; Pioneer Park, June 27-July 9; Camelot Park, July 11-22; and Heritage Park, July 25-Aug. 5.

The fee for the clinic is $20. For information, call the local community centers.

ternatives it wants to pursue. "Right now we don't know what we're going to do," he said. "We'll probably have to go back out on the rental market and find someone else who will be acceptable to the zoning board."

MEANWHILE, CENTER officials said they will sit tight until Dist. 25 and the village board decide their fate.

"We're doing nothing but waiting to hear what they have to say," Liz Burg, administrative assistant at the center, said. "We aren't looking for another place."

Housed at North School for the past 10 months, the center is open Monday through Saturday and offers services ranging from housing, employment and legal counseling to a Headstart program for preschoolers. Two days a week the center is open until 9:30 p.m., offering evening classes leading to a high school equivalency diploma and teaching English as a second language.

Wilson area residents and members of the zoning board said they are concerned that the center's clients and its 40 staff members would impose a traffic and parking problem on the Wilson neighborhood.

"People are coming, going and waiting at the center all the time," Donald Sanders, 1810 N. Highland Ave., said. "There's no way for them to get in or out of Wilson without going on to the side streets."

CAROLE GREGOR, 1804 N. Highland Ave., is concerned because Wilson has only 23 parking spaces, and that some of the school's playground area would have to be paved if the center were to relocate there.

"The Northwest Opportunity Center is doing some very fine things, but I don't feel this is the right place to put it," she said. "It belongs in town closer to better transportation and parking."

Zoning board chairman Fredric Marks believes the residents' concerns are valid, but said the traffic problem could be alleviated somewhat if the center were willing to curtail its evening program.

Marks voted to approve the center's request to relocate while board members Norma Damm, Henry Clausenius and Gary Dienstag voted to deny it. Board member Anthony Tomaso abstained.

Mrs. Burg said she believes the residents' concerns about traffic and parking are a secondary issue.

"They're afraid of having a social service agency move in because of the clientele it would attract," she said. "They feel it would be detrimental to their neighborhood because we're serving poor people."

In December IDC told Gould that the easiest way to acquire the seven-acre triangle was to buy the entire 39 acres for $1.4 million. IDC then recommended that Gould sell the property north of the tollway to finance the entire deal.

William D. Sanders, IDC president, told Ylvisaker in January that the land was worth more than $1.4 million. Sometime around the first of March, Sanders and Ylvisaker began talking about buying the 32-acre tract as an investment of their own.

IDC THEN AGREED to buy the entire 39-acre tract through a "straw person" who was to divide the land between Gould and a newly formed group called the "Algonquin Road Partners" — Ylvisaker, financial vice president Parker, Gould president Daniel Carroll, another unidentified Gould officer, attorney Thomas A. Reynolds Jr. and seven IDC employees.

The SEC does not know it, but the new partnership jelled at about the same time that the City of Rolling Meadows, at IDC's urging, solved the problem of access to the 32-acre tract. It was in December 1975 or January 1976 that IDC first approached the city about using a city-owned easement running south from Algonquin Road, recalls City Engineer James J. Muldowney. In April, the city council agreed to build a street and a bridge if the developer paid the $185,000 cost. The SEC does know that the deal began to fall into place in May when a bank approved "more than 100 per cent financing" for the land.

GOULD ENDED UP paying $940,000 for the seven-acre triangle that had been appraised at $350,000. Instead of the appraised price of $1 million, the new partnership paid $460,000 for its 32 acres.

Immediately, the partnership put that parcel on the market for three times the purchase price.

In July, the SEC says, Gould's planning manager, Jack E. Jackson, voiced his concern that the firm may have paid too much for its land. For the second time, Gould president Carroll urged that Ylvisaker explain the transaction to Gould's directors.

The directors did not learn of the transaction, though, until August when Ylvisaker sent them a "misleading" letter that said the partnership had paid the appraised price for its land.

THE SEC'S LAST entry is dated Oct. 15, 1976: the Algonquin Road Partners offered to sell the land to Gould's directors for $460,000. At the same time, Ylvisaker, in his capacity as chairman and chief executive officer, recommended that the offer be refused.

Mrs. Durk and planning manager Jackson said the SEC complaint will have no impact on the firm's plans to build a new 10-story building near the tollway.

The future of the 32-acre parcel is not as clear. IDC originally had talked about luring a large corporation to the site. City Engineer Muldowney says he's seen plans for a residential subdivision.

But, in addition to extracting a promise that Gould, Ylvisaker and financial vice president Parker will adhere to the SEC's disclosure regulations, Sirica's order says that the Algonquin Road Partners must sell their land.

Gould is to receive at least $200,000 of the proceeds, the agreement says, even if that means a loss for the partnership. If the land is sold at a profit, all of the profit must go to Gould. According to the agreement the partnership is to receive no more than the $460,000 they paid for the land.

Local scene

St. Simon's parish picnic

St. Simon's Episcopal Church will hold its annual parish picnic following the 10 a.m. worship service Sunday. The picnic will be held at Schmidt Park, adjacent to the church's east parking lot, 717 Kirchhoff Rd., Arlington Heights.

Those attending are asked to bring their own food and beverage, lawn furniture and outdoor grills.

Blood drive set Sunday

The Christian Church, 333 W. Thomas St., Arlington Heights, will hold its SureBlood drive from noon to 2 p.m. Sunday. Area residents are invited to join church members in donating a pint of blood. Donors should contact blood chairman, Kay Faklaris, 255-1799, to schedule an appointment.

If you are in good health, weigh at least 110 pounds and are between the ages of 17 and 65, you can be a volunteer donor.

The Cross and Crown Church, 1122 W. Rand Rd., Arlington Heights, also has scheduled a SureBlood drive from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m. June 26. Ed Frega, church blood chairman, urges area residents to join parishioners by calling 304-4545 to schedule an appointment to donate blood.

If you are in good health, between the ages of 17 and 65, and weigh more than 110 pounds, you can be a volunteer blood donor.

Parks offer sports clinic

A sports and activities clinic for boys and girls in grades three through eight is being offered by the Arlington Heights Park District. The clinic has been designed to teach the basic rules and strategies of soccer, basketball, tennis, tumbling, trampoline, volleyball, floor hockey and softball.

The clinic runs Monday through Friday for two weeks with the third to fifth graders meeting from 9 a.m. to noon and the sixth to eighth graders meeting from 12:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The clinic will be at Frontier Park, June 13-24; Pioneer Park, June 27-July 9; Camelot Park, July 11-22; and Heritage Park, July 25-Aug. 5.

The fee for the clinic is $20. For information, call the local community centers.

ternatives it wants to pursue. "Right now we don't know what we're going to do," he said. "We'll probably have to go back out on the rental market and find someone else who will be acceptable to the zoning board."

MEANWHILE, CENTER officials said they will sit tight until Dist. 25 and the village board decide their fate.

"We're doing nothing but waiting to hear what they have to say," Liz Burg, administrative assistant at the center, said. "We aren't looking for another place."

Housed at North School for the past 10 months, the center is open Monday through Saturday and offers services ranging from housing, employment and legal counseling to a Headstart program for preschoolers. Two days a week the center is open until 9:30 p.m., offering evening classes leading to a high school equivalency diploma and teaching English as a second language.

Wilson area residents and members of the zoning board said they are concerned that the center's clients and its 40 staff members would impose a traffic and parking problem on the Wilson neighborhood.

"People are coming, going and waiting at the center all the time," Donald Sanders, 1810 N. Highland Ave., said. "There's no way for them to get in or out of Wilson without going on to the side streets."

CAROLE GREGOR, 1804 N. Highland Ave., is concerned because Wilson has only 23 parking spaces, and that some of the school's playground area would have to be paved if the center were to relocate there.

"The Northwest Opportunity Center is doing some very fine things, but I don't feel this is the right place to put it," she said. "It belongs in town closer to better transportation and parking."

Zoning board chairman Fredric Marks believes the residents' concerns are valid, but said the traffic problem could be alleviated somewhat if the center were willing to curtail its evening program.

Marks voted to approve the center's request to relocate while board members Norma Damm, Henry Clausenius and Gary Dienstag voted to deny it. Board member Anthony Tomaso abstained.

Mrs. Burg said she believes the residents' concerns about traffic and parking are a secondary issue.

"They're afraid of having a social service agency move in because of the clientele it would attract," she said. "They feel it would be detrimental to their neighborhood because we're serving poor people."

Rhodesian troops rush Mozambique

Rhodesian troops invaded Mozambique again this week and raided a black guerrilla camp, capturing large quantities of weapons and ammunition, military authorities said Friday. A brief communique said only the raid took place "earlier this week" at a camp of the Zimbabwe (Rhodesia) African National Liberation Army in Mozambique "close to the Rhodesian border." "The small group of terrorists in the camp fled," it said, leaving behind quantities of weapons including landmines, rocket launchers, 136 mortar bombs and about 90,000 rounds of ammunition. The raid came less than a week after Rhodesian troops invaded Mozambique for seven days of antiguerrilla operations and occupied the town of Mapai, 47 miles from the border, for two days.

Portugal labor leader arrested

Portugal's former Labor Minister Costa Martins has been arrested in Luanda and accused of taking part in an attempted coup against Angola's Marxist regime two weeks ago, the Angolan news agency Angop said Friday. Martins, who fled from Portugal to Angola following an abortive coup in Lisbon in November, 1975, was accused of being "directly implicated in the reactionary coup attempt against Angola," Angop said. He was arrested Luanda. Since escaping from Portugal, Martine had served as a counselor in the Angolan Labor Ministry. He served in several Communist-dominated Portuguese provisional governments after Portugal's revolution and was labor minister under the pro-Communist military-dominated regime of Premier Vasco Goncalves in 1975.

New Israeli chiefs in 10 days

Israeli Prime Minister-Designate Menahem Begin said Friday he will announce his new government within 10 days. His largest potential coalition partner agreed to let him know by next week if it will join the coalition. "We shall do our best to form our government at the latest on Monday, June 20," Begin told reporters following a meeting with the centrist Democratic Movement for Change. The Democratic Movement is the key to how strong Begin's government will be. The Movement, headed by archeologist Yigael Yadin, will confer with its Knesset (parliament) faction about its discussions with Begin on joining a coalition headed by the ringling Likud bloc. It promised Begin an answer by Monday or Tuesday.

Vesco asks OK to live in Panama

Fugitive U.S. financier Robert L. Vesco has asked for permission to settle in Panama, the afternoon newspaper La Republica said Friday. The newspaper said Vesco, who has been asked to leave Costa Rica, wants to reside in the province of Chiriqui, which borders on Costa Rica. It added that Vesco had offered to invest in ranching and business enterprises if granted permission to live in Panama. Panamanian officials were not immediately available for comment. An aide to Costa Rican President Daniel Douber said earlier that Vesco had agreed to leave the country.

Defective wires caused club fire

Defective electrical wiring inside a ceiling and an adjacent wall area of the Zebra Room started the devastating Beverly Hills Supper Club fire that killed 161 persons, Kentucky Fire Marshal Warren Southworth disclosed Friday. The blaze, fed by combustible ceiling tile and wooden wall supports, "burned for a considerable period of time" before it was discovered, Southworth said. Revealing for the first time the findings of an intensive, two-week official inquiry into the May 28 blaze, Southworth said, "The most probable cause of ignition within this area (Zebra Room) was electrical in nature and would have been fed by combustibles located there." The official findings differed from an earlier report by a private fire investigation team hired by insurers, who concluded that sparks from a short-circuited electrical cord leading to a fountain near the Zebra Room started the blaze.

'No attorney for Korean probe'

In a letter released Friday, Attorney General Griffin Bell said a Republican proposal for a special prosecutor to investigate alleged South Korean payoffs to congressmen is "inappropriate and unnecessary." In a second letter, Bell said he opposed Senate legislation to create a new office of government crimes within the Justice Dept. to handle such things as the allegations of Korean payoffs and bribes. In a letter to Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., dated May 19, Bell rejected the Republican proposal, saying, "In the present case, unlike Watergate, there are no allegations against the attorney general or other department officials. There is also no indication of involvement by others in the administration," he said. "Appointment of a special prosecutor for this matter is inappropriate and unnecessary."

Thoughts on a Mattress Poem: Back-ache Blues*

Once upon a midnight sleeping
Suddenly I woke up weeping.
Something happened in my mattress
To disturb my night's repose.
While I rested nearly napping,
Suddenly there came a snapping
As the springs unleashed their zapping
Every time I tried to doze.

Why is this mattress getting bumpy?
Why the surface worn and lumpy?
Could it be because I've used it
Every night for twenty years?
Maybe I should buy a new one
To replace this ancient ruin.
Could the Schaumburg Mattress factory
Drive away my back-ache tears?

Morning found me weak and worried.
To the Factory I hurried.
Bought a mattress and a box spring
To relieve my back-ache blues.
Now I sleep with blissful ease.
No more back-ache memories.
Now I know why Schaumburg Mattress
Well deserves its rave reviews.

Last stop on goodwill tour

Rosalynn, Perez talk human rights, arms limitation

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI) — Rosalynn Carter arrived Friday on the last stop on her Latin America goodwill mission to talk with President Carlos Andres Perez about the gap between poor and rich nations, human rights and arms limitations.

The First Lady came from Colombia, where she talked with President Alfonso Lopez Michelsen about ways of halting Colombian drug traffickers who pump an estimated $500 million worth of illegal drugs a year into the United States.

Venezuela's first lady, Blanquita Rodriguez de Perez, and Foreign Minister Ramon Escobar Salom greeted Mrs. Carter at the airport in a ceremony without military honors or national anthems.

B-1 opponents believe Carter will OK plane

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Two congressional opponents of the B-1 bomber said Friday they are convinced President Carter will approve production of the supersonic plane, but the White House said the pair had misinterpreted Carter's remarks.

Reps. Robert Drinan, D-Mass., and Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., drew their conclusion after a 30-minute session with the President, saying he had cited new "secret information" from the Central Intelligence Agency.

They also said Carter revealed during the meeting that Defense Sec. Harold Brown favors B-1 production.

BUT THE WHITE House press office hours later issued a statement saying Brown has made no recommendation, Carter has made no decision and there is no "secret information."

"The President's remarks referred to the attitudes of the two men prior to taking office," the statement said.

During the presidential campaign last year, Carter called the B-1 "an exotic, wasteful" weapon and Brown indicated he might favor it.

On the "secret" information, the White House said, "the President's remark is simply in reference to the fact that since becoming President he has access to fuller and classified information on the military capability of the United States and other countries."

"His remarks were not intended to imply that such information disposes him to build the B-1."

CARTER TOLD those at the meeting — all B-1 opponents — he would "go into seclusion" to make his decision, but Drinan and Dellums came away convinced he was leaning toward B-1 production.

"I'm convinced the President is leaning definitely to authorize it," Drinan said. "He spoke very cryptically of secret information now available to them," reportedly from the CIA.

Drinan and Dellums said Carter told the group he will be able to explain "this lonely decision" to the American people, and Drinan said, "I don't think it would be necessary to add that unless he were going the other way (approving the new warplane)."

Meanwhile, a key Senate subcommittee Friday recommended $1.2 billion to purchase five controversial B-1 bombers while voting to slash fringe benefits in an overall $111 billion military appropriation bill.

SEN. JOHN STENNIS, D-Miss., announced the defense appropriations subcommittee also recommended $40.6 million in the 1978 appropriation bill for air launched cruise missiles.

The panel's total recommendation was $2.9 billion below President Carter's amended request of $113.9 billion and $6.6 billion above 1977 appropriations.

The air launched cruise missile is a disputed weapon in the U.S.-Soviet strategic arms talks.

"HERE IN Venezuela we have always been attentive to the political career of your husband, President Carter," said Mrs. Perez. "We know therefore of his great concern, his dedication, to the cause of human rights."

"I also share his idea that all the presidents' wives should work to help solve the problems of our nations. That has been my norm since I have occupied the position of first lady."

Mrs. Carter took Mrs. Perez' hand, then stepped back and launched into her reply without awaiting the translation into English of the welcome remarks.

"I believe that my visit is a manifestation of the special sentiment that Jimmy and I attribute to relations with your country."

"VENEZUELA HAS been and is a great leader in the hemisphere and in the world. It has promoted new and important institutions like SELA, the Latin-American Economic System, a very creative means for promoting the areas economic development."

"Today we face many challenges. How can we increase respect for human rights? How can we reduce the economic breach between industrialized and developing nations? How can we avoid the dissemination of nuclear arms and utilize our resources for development instead of the purchase of arms?"

"These are some of the things that I wish to examine here with Venezuela's leaders."

She concluded with a few words in Spanish: "I'm very content to be in your beautiful country. I thank you for this 'simpatica' welcome."

Crane raps hospital costs control

by KURT BAER

President Carter's proposals to control hospital costs are potentially "destructive" and probably will not pass Congress, U.S. Rep. Philip M. Crane, R-12th, said Friday.

"Nothing would be more destructive to the quality of health care than to put arbitrary caps on hospital prices, or to try to take money out of the hides of physicians," said Crane, who is a member of the House Ways and Means Committee that this week killed several key parts of Carter's energy package.

Crane predicted a similar fate for Carter's proposal to put a 9 per cent ceiling on hospital costs increases as well as any move by the government to control physicians' fees.

THE ADMINISTRATION has hinted at a plan to limit doctors' fees in certain circumstances as part of an overall effort to curtail rising health care costs. But it has made no specific proposal to Congress.

"Carter's campaign was very supportive of wage-price controls and he specifically had the standby authority to impose controls written into the Democratic platform," Crane said.

"He claims to have backed away from controls and has issued a lot of assurances that he won't invoke them. But Carter is pushing controls on hospital costs, talking controls on physicians' fees, and I think it is quite clear that he has no philosophical objections to price controls," said

Crane, who was in the 12th District Friday to meet with reporters.

Hospital price controls would lead to cutbacks in health care quality and force postponement of the purchase of life-saving equipment, he said.

CRANE SAID Carter's proposal is poorly conceived because it would exempt low-level hospital employees' salaries from the 9 per cent ceiling, exempt government hospitals from all controls, and because it fails to recognize local tax increases that affect private hospitals.

Americans' reliance on health care insurance to pay medical bills has fostered an almost limitless appetite for the best possible health care, he said.

And he cited the problems of socialized medicine in Great Britain as evidence that government-controlled medicine is undesirable.

Defense stresses Rhoads 'insanity'

Defense attorneys for accused murderer David Rhoads of Palatine Friday tried to bolster their stand that Rhoads was insane when he allegedly set his wife on fire last July.

Psychiatrist Werner Tuteur testified that Rhoads, 28, suffered from severe mental disorders at the time he reportedly poured gasoline on his wife Vicki and set her on fire at her parents' home, 306 N. Morris Dr., Palatine.

Tuteur said because of Rhoads' mental illness he was unable to understand the criminal nature of his act.

RHOADS IS CHARGED with the arson-murder of his 18-year-old wife, who died July 18 from severe burns sustained in the fire the day before.

Tuteur offered his testimony as the Rhoads trial in the Evanston branch of Cook County Circuit Court began its second week.

Public defenders Paul Plotnick and Richard Kavitt wound up their case Friday with descriptions of Rhoads' history of psychiatric problems, which included at least six suicide attempts.

Rhoads, however, earlier testified that he had received no psychiatric treatment from late 1973 until the day of the alleged slaying. Under cross examination by Assistant State's Atty. Sol Rajfer Thursday Rhoads admitted that he was living "pretty normally" in July 1976.

ALSO TESTIFYING for the defense at Friday's session was Dr. Paul Cherian, a psychiatrist at Cermak Memorial Hospital, Chicago, where Rhoads was confined several days after his arrest July 17.

Cherian said Rhoads "was extremely depressed and had some suicidal tendencies" when he was admitted July 22. He said Rhoads' illness was diagnosed as schizophrenia.

After several stays in Cermak Hospital last fall Rhoads was examined by Tuteur in his Elgin office, Tuteur testified.

The psychiatrist said Rhoads related his history of "heavy use of alcohol and drugs," including LSD and cocaine.

Tuteur said Rhoads told him that on the day of the fire Rhoads and his wife were "loading up on drugs without control." Rhoads earlier testified that he had drunk about 20 cans of beer that day and more than a third of a bottle of tequila.

Anti-gay vote destructive

Anita Bryant's crusade against homosexuals in Miami, Fla., is a destructive approach to an emotion-packed issue.

Miss Bryant, until recently best-known as a promoter of orange juice, has become a national spokesman for a certain brand of intolerant wholesomeness by leading a successful crusade to repeal a gay rights ordinance passed earlier this year by the Dade County, Fla., board.

The ordinance added homosexuals to the list of persons protected from discrimination in jobs and housing.

In campaigning against the ordinance, Miss Bryant quoted the Bible to assert that homosexuality is an abomination to God's law. After the law was repealed in last Tuesday's referendum, she said, "The people of Dade County and the normal majority have said, 'Enough, enough, enough.' They have voted to repeal an obnoxious assault on our moral values."

Miami has a large, visible homosexual community, many of whom are given to haunting the beaches, flaunting not only their sexual preferences but their sexuality.

To this sort of thing, people did, indeed, say, "Enough."

But Miss Bryant is deluding herself, and them, when she says they voted to "repeal an obnoxious assault on our moral values."

If it is, in fact, the business of government to regulate sexual preference, there are two routes through which this might be achieved: repression or positive action programs. In making herself the nation's chief anti-homosexual spokesman, Miss Bryant has neither urged laws to punish people for their homosexual preference nor encouraged programs to help homosexual people cope with or grow away from their preferences.

She has simply told homosexuals to get back in their closets where their assault on the moral values of the majority will be less obvious. That is equivalent to condemning only public, not private, sin, a position even Miss Bryant should find inconsistent if she thinks about it carefully.

The debate over whether homosexuals are — or should be — considered a minority group deserving the same protection as racial and religious minorities is one that will not be resolved easily.

On one side, it is easy to argue that prohibiting discrimination against homosexuals is no different ethically than laws against discrimination against blacks or Jews. Just a few years ago, a similar referendum to repeal the law barring racial discrimination surely would have passed in Dade County (and it still might).

At the same time, there is a case to be made that sexual preference and the homosexual lifestyle are in fact different from a racial or religious affiliation and that landlords or employers ought to be able to exercise a personal moral judgment on overt homosexuality.

Gay activist leaders say Miss Bryant's campaign has only unified them behind a cause. Perhaps. But they felt that way in Miami, too. Some gays there suppressed their more outrageous public behavior, temporarily, to win public support. But the people of Dade County clearly rejected their lifestyle.

As the debate on the gay rights' issue continues, gay activists may find it more profitable to ask the courts to define their rights rather than depending on public acceptance or sympathy.

Sprinkling ban blunder

Officials of Rolling Meadows blundered last week when they imposed a total outdoor water use ban and failed adequately to inform Rolling Meadows residents.

The ban was imposed over Memorial Day weekend by Public Works Dir. John Hennessy. However, even by this week, the aldermen who are elected to represent Rolling Meadows voters had not been officially informed.

In addition, secretaries in city hall, the persons most likely to receive first inquiries about the ban from residents, weren't clear about its provisions.

Such confusion can only result unnecessarily in hard feelings and serious enforcement problems in a situation which, at best, is going to be trying to all concerned.

Residents who have taken the water shortage seriously need to know what rules to observe if they are to conserve water. And those who remain skeptical can use such bureaucratic mix-ups as an excuse for remaining indifferent to official warnings.

Rolling Meadows officials must be more careful about communication in the future. And other communities who will face the problem this summer should take note of the need to provide adequate information.

Comments on Palatine cops

To the officers of the Palatine Police Department:

I apologize to you for writing my remarks to you today. I would much rather talk with you straight from the shoulder, but because of the circumstances currently existing in Palatine, that is not possible.

The ongoing union activity is very important to each and every one of you, and is, likewise, important to the community. I, therefore, want to make a citizen's position on the union issue clear to you, for it is my experience unions do not operate in your best interest, nor in ours.

One of the first things a union will promise is a wage increase, so let's talk about that. Unions will promise all sorts of fringes and wage increases. No union can guarantee any increases in wages, fringes, or anything else. Your wages, your benefits, and your working conditions all must come from the village. Palatine provided your job here, not the union. You haven't had to pay dues to keep your job. The village pays your wages, not the union. The village provides your benefits, not the union. No union has ever given you anything, and no union ever will.

Let's suppose for a minute a union did get into your department. Would the village have to give all the things unions usually promise? The answer is no. Would the village have to sign the union's contract? Again, the answer is no, especially if the community did not agree that it was economic or sound.

Unfortunately, for the unsuspecting prospective union members, unions aren't called upon to fulfill their campaign promises until after acceptance. Then, when the union boss fails to fulfill his campaign promises, he merely says, "Sorry, I tried, but I just couldn't get the village to give in." So he lets you strike, slowdown, or whatever.

I think the village board is correct in its estimation of the labor situation. Organized labor has essentially destroyed the British economy, has hugely crippled the construction, ship-

She hits parade

The reporting on the Mount Prospect Memorial Day Parade was a farce.

What happened to the uniformed members of our Armed Forces? The Drum and Bugle Corps? The decorated veterans? Were our students too busy to honor our servicemen? I always thought Mount Prospect cared and counted on everyone young and old alike. Were they too busy to commemorate our honored living and dead?

Our citizens were far and few between along the parade route. The children who marched were looking forward to a meaningful program at the park. Instead, a bumbled speech. Flowers that were flopped on a symbolic grave. The most humiliating thing was the recorded version of our national anthem which no one sang.

Where are the Americans of yesterday? Is this an example of the patriotic Americans of today? How soon we forget the anguish of war.

ping, and auto industries in America, made it largely impossible for the average person to enjoy a live symphony orchestra performance in most major American cities (particularly New York), and by its unrelenting extortion, has crippled essential municipal services all over the country.

The only difference between a fort and a prison is who owns the key to the gate. Labor unions advertise forts — they sell and install prisons. This was confirmed by 100,000 letters to the McClellan Commission (remember?) a few short years ago, and things are no better now. The Landrum-Griffin Act, like a strong antibiotic, resulted in no permanent changes, only smarter targets. Labor unions begin in chicly humble cottages on the edge of a city, looking like the "working man's friend," if you ignore the Cadillacs that come and go, and the fat goons wearing shiny $500 suits that drift in and out of the place. But they blossom into the nicest protection and extortion racket you ever saw, with the blessing and connivance of the National Labor Relations Board.

We have a good community here, and a friendly place to live. We know that only by pulling together can we improve our welfare. The only way to have a city is to keep the major international unions out. Once they're in, their money, power, and violence simply take over. Prices go up, production goes down, and no one is willing to say anything for fear of his life.

Judge criticized

On considering Judge Archie Simonson's ruling that rape is justified because of the clothing the woman was wearing, a person wonders what steps will follow according to Judge Simonson's logic.

Will our court system now rule that other crimes are justified?

For example:
Will a hold-up be justified if the victim wore an expensive suit?

Will a murder be justified if the victim was standing at a lonely bus stop after dark?

Will burglary be justified if a home carried costly merchandise or a home contained a color television or stereo equipment?

Aren't banks asking to be robbed by blatantly having money around?

There's some good in the news

I had stopped in at MacDonald's restaurant on Algonquin Road, in Rolling Meadows, with my husband and a friend for breakfast in leaving I was engrossed with their promotional coffee cups and cleaning up our table, that I forgot my purse. I had cashed a check the night before and had about $150.00 cash in my purse, plus all my charge plates, check book, keys, etc. God was so good to me, for whoever found the purse had turned it in to the manager of the store.

May I extend my greatest gratitude and appreciation to the individual who found my purse plus the management and employees of the restaurant.

Bizarre developments in Israel's government

The news from Israel goes from bad to bizarre. For a while it was being speculated that Menahem Begin, prospective new premier and old terrorist, might yet be susceptible to moderation — either at the urging of a restive faction of his own Likud bloc or through a coalition with a new and promising party, the Democratic Movement for Change.

Then comes word that Begin has chosen as his foreign minister in his new government... Moshe Dayan.

The only assuring aspect of that thunderbolt for many Israelis was that at least the appointment wasn't as defense minister. Last time Moshe Dayan held that post, the old war hero displayed extravagant confidence for months, maybe years, before the Yom Kippur War and abject panic after its opening blows — when he advised retreating to a defensive posture on both fronts. That would have assured a long war of attrition perfectly suited to the overwhelming Arab preponderance in numbers.

BUT BY THEN, Premier Golda Meir had ceased relying on legendary reputations and begun trusting her own instincts. General Dayan's counsel was ignored in favor of a counter-offensive, with the result that within a couple of weeks Israel had troops within striking distance of both Cairo and Damascus, and, consequently, the United Nations ceasefire that is de rigueur under such circumstances.

Now, having been judged harshly by Israeli public opinion and remarkably leniently by the official inquiry, Moshe Dayan rises from the back benches of the Labor Party to accept "in principle" the opposition's offer of minister for foreign affairs. "In principle" is a curious phrase to use in the circumstances. Since under the Israeli system (the same one that drove the French to distraction during the Fourth Republic) voters cast their ballots for parties rather than individuals, Labor, having put Moshe Dayan on its ticket and so secured a parliamentary seat for him, turns out to have provided its rivals with a foreign minister.

THAT EXPLAINS THE howls of outrage emanating from Labor at his defection. Nor could many supporters of Likud have foreseen that their own party's leaders might be passed over in choosing a foreign minister. At last report, General Dayan had been principled enough to turn in his Labor party membership, but not the parliamentary seat the party had won for him. With levantine politics like this, how can anyone contend that Israel is not a natural part of the Middle East?

But in the midst of these dramatic developments, there is still need for a little perspective. One is reminded of that by a statement from Jordan's King Hussein, who says the chances for peace in the Middle East have been decreased by the outcome of the Israeli election. True enough, Israel now is getting a leader almost as hard line as... well, as Jordan's King Hussein.

Tough as Israel's putative new premier talks, it might be noted that he is quietly signaling to Washington that the Israeli hold on the West Bank remains negotiable. While King Hussein has never admitted the possibility of yielding an inch of the West Bank to Israel. The West Bank became Jordanian territory in the first place when Jordan's Arab Legion seized it by force in 1948. Menahem Begin has never suggested forbidding Arab pilgrimages to Jerusalem, but under Jordan's King Hussein, not only Israel's Jews but its Moslems were barred from visiting their shrines.

An Israeli hardliner may still be yielding compared to an Arab moderate.

Are social problems being dealt with?

McGovern attacks administration

GEORGE MCGOVERN:
For the first time in 10 years, we have the happy opportunity of being hopeful about a national administration. But as we knew a decade ago, meager for Vietnam, we also and always have the harder obligation of being honest about the defects as well as the good deeds of Democratic power.

Let us keep the promise of economic justice. If the Democratic Party betrays that goal, which is our oldest pledge and the greatest difference between the parties, then our success will become mere office-mongering for ourselves. A new administration was not elected in order to hand out 2,500 Schedule C jobs to politicians, but provide jobs for unemployed millions of Americans.

Yet in reviewing economic policy this spring, it sometimes seems difficult to remember who won last fall. In the words of George Meany, whose voice has been one of the few heard amid the sounds of liberal silence, the economic stimulus plan was "shameful" and a "bitter disappointment to everyone who looked to this administration for economic justice for the poor."

THE CORPORATIONS have cried the wolf of "business confidence" and the administration has run scared.

Not only can we afford full employment, but we cannot afford continued unemployment. The difference between today's jobless rate and the 4 per cent goal costs the national government $53 billion a year in social programs and lost taxes as well as $120 billion of lost output.

How is the present administration doing in addressing the major social problems facing America? On May 7 Sen. George McGovern, president of Americans for Democratic Action attacked Jimmy Carter's presidential performance. On May 17 in a speech to the United Auto Workers' convention, Carter replied. Excerpts from the two speeches are presented here.

It is a curious double standard which tells only the worst off among us to ask what they can do for the economy.

This administration favors new natural gas prices triple the rate that the federal court found to be reasonable last year — and the producers would reap $5½ billion extra over the next 10 years. If the energy industry refuses to invest without bloated prices, then let us tax excess profits. If they hoard supplies or buy up alternative sources, then let us break their monopoly over our marketplace. Such matters are questions not just of management, but of social morality.

BUSINESS APPEASEMENT at full tide threatens to sweep away another basic Democratic commitment — one which was reiterated over and over during the campaign — that we would change a tax system which is "a disgrace to the human race." We thought the disgrace was not mere inefficiency, but vast inequities. Today the most privileged 5 per cent of our population owns over 50 per cent of our national wealth — and nearly one-half of our people have only one-fiftieth of it. They did not expect — they did not vote for — tax injustice in the name of justice. So let us keep our pledge — not technically and in title only, but truly and in substance.

The Democratic promises were not made to be postponed. Welfare reform should not be delayed until 1981. And national health care must not be offered repeatedly and put off indefinitely. Doctors pressured HEW into exempting them from its proposed price restraints. Instead, a Democratic administration ought to be resisting vested influence and reorganizing the whole wasteful structure of medicine for hire. Then perhaps even in dollars and certainly in lives, national health care would be less expensive than the present non-system of national health neglect.

If our promises are impractical now, they were impractical last year and our party should never have made them. At every turn we are told that they cost too much. But cost, cost, cost has been the litany of opposition to every social justice since the New Deal. The opposition is a sometime thing: It all depends on whose welfare is at stake. Why didn't the Lockheed loan cost too much? Why didn't the Penn Central bail out? Why isn't the investment tax credit too expensive?

IF FACT, WE cannot afford to keep our promises selectively. They are a seamless web. We can have the revenues for welfare reform if tax reform does not become more loopholes or lower rates for the higher brackets. And we can have enough resources for other initiatives only if we keep one other pledge — that in power a Democratic president will challenge the excesses of the Pentagon budget.

The clearest lesson of the last decade is that we cannot be both aarrison state and a just society. America cannot be both Sparta and Athens. If we had that promised $5 to $7 billion reduction in the military budget instead of a Pentagon lobbying for more billions, we could begin reversing the decline of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Detroit, all the great cities of the industrial Northeast, all of them centers of our civilization as much as our commerce. In those cities the urban crisis is not a cliché, but a burning issue — and the fire next time could flare up next summer or next year.

We want to be able to applaud the President's record as strongly as we approved the platform on which he ran.

Carter answers his liberal critics

JIMMY CARTER:

I believe that we can build an America in which our day-to-day practices live up to our democratic ideals — in which family life is strong and stable — in which the neighborhoods of our cities are vital and safe — in which work is justly and fairly rewarded — in which opportunity is not limited by color or sex or religion or economic background — in which there is schooling and employment for the young and dignity and security for the old.

The achievement of all our goals depends on the first one — a strong and growing economy.

We must attack both joblessness and rising prices — because experience has shown that if we don't attack them together, we won't be able to put a real dent in either.

To get our economy moving again, we have proposed both direct job creation and permanent tax reduction for low- and middle-income taxpayers.

TO HELP OUR hard-pressed cities, we have supported . . . a major expansion of countercyclical revenue sharing. We've also proposed a major expansion of our community block grant program, with changes that will stimulate private investment in housing and other development and put more of the money into the cities that need it most.

I want particularly to stress two points about our economic policy.

One point is that we aim by 1981 to balance the budget in a strong and healthy economy, with the revenues that such an economy produces. It's not legitimate spending on human needs that cause deficits — it is principally the inadequate revenues from a sluggish economy that create them.

The other point is that I am unalterably opposed to fighting inflation by economic and budgetary policies which keep unemployment high and factories idle. That approach is economically ineffective and morally bankrupt. If the recovery should falter during the years ahead I will propose the economic and budgetary measures needed to get it going again.

YOU KNOW THAT meeting our energy goals will be tough. It will require sacrifice from everyone in the country.

Our present welfare system robs the taxpayers who support it, discourages the people who administer it, and degrades the people who really do need help. It is an extraordinarily complex and difficult problem — even more so than we had expected. I outlined the principles that must underlie the reform of the system, and we will have legislative proposals ready by the end of the summer.

We've begun to move in this direction by simplifying the food stamp program, eliminating the purchase requirement and reforming the eligibility rules.

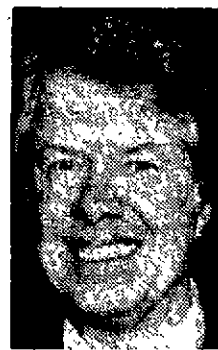

As for our tax system, it too must be reformed through and through. Our tax system was once relatively simple and progressive. It isn't any more, because it has been changed so much over the years — often for the benefit of those who are rich enough to hire their own lobbyists. The process of redesign is well underway, and we intend to submit legislation to the Congress as early as possible this year.

I AM COMMITTED to the phasing in of a workable national health insurance system. We are aiming to submit legislative proposals early next year.

But we must move immediately to start bringing health care costs under control. If we don't, the cost of any national health program will double every five years.

Hospital costs take 40 cents of every health dollar, and they have gone up an incredible 1,000 per cent since 1950.

I have proposed hospital cost containment legislation that would put the brakes on these increases. It allows for special situations and improvement of care, but it also rewards efficiency and begins to check the spiraling costs. This is the first step toward comprehensive national health care.

WE NEED TO create an agency for consumer protection. This bill would consolidate consumer advocacy programs that are now scattered ineffectively throughout the maze of federal agencies. It would give consumers a voice in government offices where, too often, the only voices heard have been those of lobbyists for the wealthy and powerful.

There are now enormous pressures to kill the legislation creating this new consumer agency. And some powerful special interests are trying to kill the electoral reform bill, because they don't want working people to register and to vote. We can't let them get away with it.

We must also make government more efficient — because we don't have the money to waste on inefficiency, duplication, or to give handouts to those we can take care of ourselves.

We can cut both unemployment and inflation — and I believe that our policies will help us reach both these goals.

We can do these things if we remember that nothing good comes quickly or easily, that we must make hard choices about how to use our resources, and that only lean, efficient government can translate our good intentions into actions that will improve the lives of our people.

Carter needs to back up Pentagon whistle blowers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — As far as Air Force cost analyst A. Ernest Fitzgerald is concerned, Richard M. Nixon or Gerald Ford might as well be in the White House.

Repressions and retaliations by Fitzgerald's Air Force superiors continue despite the campaign promise of President Jimmy Carter "to protect our federal employees from harassment and dismissal if they find out and report waste or dishonesty by their superiors."

All of President Carter's campaign rhetoric has had no impact on the repressive and hostile climate in which Fitzgerald has been working in the Pentagon since the federal court and the Civil Service Commission directed the Air Force to restore him to his post in 1973.

FITZGERALD, WHO was fired by the Nixon Administration after testifying accurately on the nearly $2 billion in cost overruns on the C-5A jet transport program, is under fire again for pointing out possible "illegality" of Air Force spending on a $800-million computer program.

The Carter administration has not fired Fitzgerald for his frank memorandums in opposition to the Air Force Advanced Logistic Systems (ALS) program, but hostility to his honest independence is apparent at the highest levels in the Air Force and the Pentagon.

At the heart of the present controversy is a joint congressional report of December 10, 1975, directing the Air Force to "terminate" the ALS program. Because the Air Force contended that some parts of the over-all program were "mission essential," Congress permitted programs authorized as "mission essential" to be exceptions to the termination directive.

The Air Force then divided the $800-million project into dozens of smaller projects, classified each as "mission essential" and continued spending on virtually all parts of a program which Congress had directed be "terminated."

FITZGERALD'S FIRST memorandums spelling out the waste and possible illegality (because the overall program had been terminated by Congress) were written in the summer of 1976. Those memorandums were ignored by his superiors and did not surface until recent weeks in connection with congressional inquiries initiated by Representative John Moss (Dem., Cal.).

Gen. David C. Jones, Air Force Chief of Staff, promised Congress a full investigation by Lt. Gen. Charles E. Buckingham, the comptroller of the Air Force. However, the same General Buckingham and others were trying to picture the computer foul-up as part of a Fitzgerald vendetta against the Air Force. General Buckingham had mouthed Fitzgerald as "biased" and minimized the written evidence of the Air Force's disregard for the law and regulations in contract awards.

Fitzgerald and a host of other whistle blowers were pleased at President Carter's election last fall, and elated when the transition team included a small group with the task of following through with plans to correct past wrongs and to make sure there were no repetitions of wrongful and illegal retaliations. HOWEVER, WHEN the transition team was dispersed to various other tasks, new priorities took over.

In recent weeks, President Carter's whistle blower program has landed on the desk of Gregory Schneiders, White House director of special projects.

Although Schneiders seems to be a sincere young man with personal concern over the injustices Fitzgerald and others have suffered, his inquiries still are in the exploratory stage and he is not sure what, if anything, he may recommend.

A new priority is needed for the protection of Pentagon whistle blowers, and President Carter should be made to see it.

With HomeCard™ you can make deposits or withdrawals on your savings account at all Dominick's Finer Foods stores throughout the Chicago area.* Later, it is planned that more retail stores will participate and, of course, HomeCard™ can be used at all Home Federal offices. It makes a HomeCard™ account the most convenient, quickest and easiest-to-use savings account in Chicagoland.

It can save you time.

You can also cash personal checks with your HomeCard™ at any Dominick's Finer Foods store once you've opened an account.* That can be a big help when you're short of cash.

It can save you trouble.

Your HomeCard™ account earns 5¼% interest, compounded daily, from the day of deposit to the day of withdrawal. Now you can keep money in your savings account that you used to keep in cash, or in your checking account, and earn interest right up to the day you make your withdrawal.

It can save you lost interest.

With HomeCard™ you get a quarterly statement mailed to you. It shows all of your transactions for that period, clearly identified as to where they were made—specific store location or Home Federal office—plus all the interest you've earned and your current balance.

It can save you confusion.

Your savings are always around when you need them as long as HomeCard™ is in your pocket or purse—even nights and weekends! It's nice to know you're just a little better prepared for the unexpected.

It can save you embarrassment.

Introducing HomeCard.

The new savings account from Home Federal that saves a lot more than money.

HomeCard™

The savings account you carry in your pocket.

Send in the coupon or stop by any Home Federal office to apply for your HomeCard.

*To use your HomeCard™ for cash withdrawals at any Dominick's store, your withdrawal cannot reduce your HomeCard™ balance below $100. To cash your personal checks at participating stores with your HomeCard™, your account must have a minimum $100 balance and sufficient cleared funds to cover your check. Withdrawals, including check cashing, limited to $200 per day, and $500 per week at participating stores.

SUNSHINE AND HEALTHY plants aren't always synonymous, says Ken Brewer of Tropical Plant Rental. Brewer, sharing the spotlight with a dracaena warneckii at the Hyatt Regency O'Hare, maintains anyone can grow plants in less-than-ideal conditions if they make a few concessions.

Dreams of lush foliage shouldn't dim with shade

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Even if we don't know a ficus tree from a dwarf palm, most of us would love to show off a home or apartment filled with lush green plants. And if you have a sunny kitchen or a family room with a south picture window, you're on your way.

But what about the unlucky ones whose living rooms never see the sun, or those poor souls with basement apartments? Are they doomed to air ferns and plastic ivy?

Not on your life, says Ken Brewer. And he ought to know. As a horticulturist from Tropical Plant Rental in Prairie View, Brewer helped pick 6,000 plants that would thrive in the balconies, elevator stairwells and lobby of the Hyatt Regency O'Hare — a setting with less-than-ideal light conditions.

WHILE THE FICUS trees in the Hyatt Regency lobby are bolstered with high intensity artificial lighting, most of the hotel's plants (which include 5,000 philodendrons) grow under their own steam, despite the frequent absence of direct sunlight. And so can plants at home, says Brewer, as long as you take a few precautions.

Many plant varieties will tolerate shade, but if your idea of "low light" is a gloomy hallway you'll be hard-pressed to find a plant that will survive, said Brewer.

At the Hyatt Regency, for example, the corn plants and palms located in the dark entrance to Hugo's restaurant are not permanent fixtures: after about six to eight months in such low light conditions, the plants are replaced with duplicates, he pointed out.

ONE OF THE HARDEST plants for low-light conditions is the sansaveria or mother-in-law tongue, Brewer said. If the sansaveria doesn't make it, chances are nothing else will either. Other good bets, all used at the Hyatt Regency, include philodendron (both cordatum, the vine variety, and pothos, the yellow-leaved species), the dracaena massangeana or corn plant, spathiphyllum or peace lily, meantha bella or dwarf palm, and most varieties of ferns.

Contrary to popular opinion, most ivies are not suited for low light, and the majority of hanging baskets need a prominent place in front of an east or south window, he added.

Once you've found a healthy plant that will tolerate low light levels (and Brewer says it's just as easy to find them at a discount store or supermarket as at a greenhouse or nursery), it's important to remember that sunlight, water and fertilizer are dependent on one another.

A PLANT IN INDIRECT light will need much less water and fertilizer than one in an east window — a fact that home gardeners often forget until they're faced with rotting, decaying roots, noted Brewer. As a general rule, it's often better to forego a regular watering schedule in favor of an "only when it's dry" plan, he said.

Summer's increased light levels will mean extra watering and fertilizing in some cases, but again it should be done only if the plant shows evidence of drying out, he added. And while any plant can adopt and thrive in brighter light within the home, transferring a plant to an outdoor patio or terrace for the summer could prove a costly mistake.

"The human eye has a lot of difficulty distinguishing light intensities, and even the shadiest outdoor location gets much more light than anywhere else in the home," he said. "It would be almost the same as sitting on a sunny beach from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m."

THIS ARALIA baurifloriana may be a handsome addition to Hugo's at the Hyatt Regency O'Hare, but at a commercial price of $800, it's out of reach for most plant-lovers.

Tight spots need special shrubs

If you have narrow strips of land, like those shown on the accompanying plan, and you want to plant in them, you need to select suitable shrubs and plants. To use fast-growing shrubs, which soon outgrow restricted areas, is to invite their removal and replacement.

There are a variety of ground-cover plants that will adapt and neatly fill in narrow strips, but it is more interesting in some cases to use taller-growing shrubs.

With the exception of the Hick's Yews (Taxus media Hickall), all the plants in the plan are low-growing. The tall-growing Hick's Yew is easy to keep at any height you want by pruning once a year. The other plants shown in the plan are slow enough in growth to control easily.

George Creed

It's your landscape

Spreading English Yew (Taxus baccata repandens) is a low-growing shrub with fine evergreen foliage and a more or less flat top. It is probably the hardest of the yews. Decorative red berries adorn this shrub in the fall, although they are not as conspicuous as those on the American holly.

AUTUMN FIRE Cotoneaster (Cotoneaster x Herbstfeuer) is a prostrate cotoneaster with evergreen leaves and an abundance of small red berries. It does spread but is not hard to control.

Naturally columnar in form, the Hick's Yew has excellent dark green foliage and red berries that appear in the autumn. Of the many different prostrate junipers, Sargent Chinese Juniper (Juniperus chinensis Sargentii) (Sketch D) is one of the finest. Perhaps its outstanding characteristic is the steel gray color of its foliage, which it holds throughout the winter. It grows to a height of about 10 inches.

Another good evergreen, with excellent bluish foliage, is the Blue Rug Juniper (Juniperus horizontalis 'Wilton'). Like the Sargent Juniper, this grows to a height of about 10 inches.

Q. Years ago my grandmother used to grow a strange-looking plant she called Elephant Ears. Are these still available?

A. Yes, you can still buy them. In case you can't find them listed under their common name, the botanical name for Elephant Ears is Caladium esculentum.

Q. Does bone meal contain nitrogen?
A. The nitrogen, content of bone meal is relatively small, but it is high in phosphoric acid.

Design includes professional office

Frequently architects are being asked by prospective home builders to design a building that includes either rentable space or an office to be used for professional purposes. Illustrated is such a space, located directly inside the front door of this side-to-side split level.

Entrance to this room is placed in such a manner that its occupant does not disturb the rest of the house. Adequate storage space allows flexibility for use as an office, a fourth bedroom or an overflow for family activities.

Angles designed into the plan create special interest. Splayed pierced masonry wall with a conforming roof over the front walk from the garage to the main entrance lends an exotic touch to the facade. It further breaks the height of the two-story section, integrates one section with the other and relieves the boxlike line from an end view. Splayed end walls of the formal living room and dining area provide an interesting departure from the usual "squared" look. This area is large and open, extending onto the rear dining terrace through sliding glass doors. A fireplace on the right wall rivals for attention.

A KITCHEN-FAMILY room combination offers 23 feet of wide open space in length and leads outdoors through sliding glass doors to the rear terrace. A circular breakfast balcony with wrought-iron railing overlooks the family room. A trellis with planters at the side of the stairs opens additional space.

A special service entrance is placed adjacent to the functionally planned kitchen, with its segregated work areas. A mudroom-laundry and a bath with shower near the main rear entrance and garage serve both the family living space and the office (or fourth bedroom). There is a special closet here for outdoor gear. The garage has a separate storage closet of its own.

THE BASEMENT, located under the living area, is entered from the family room. A centralized traffic hub for all levels and a minimum of halls throughout allow for maximum use of space for living.

This home is carefully zoned into formal and informal areas. Three bedrooms are separated in a quiet space above the garage and the office. Two rooms are large enough for twin beds and storage furniture. Closets are more than adequate throughout. A tub, stall shower, double lavatories and a towel cabinet equip the bedroom bath.

Paint may trim bills

Painting walls a light color can help trim your electric bill, says Elwood D. Bickford, manager of the Environmental Lighting division of Duro-Lite Lamps, Inc. Pale-colored rooms can use lower wattage light bulbs, he said. If you've been using 150 watts, try 100. Bickford, says a narrow hallway with pale walls needs only 25 watts for safe lighting. And three watts are adequate to light you way in the dark.

Growing giant vegetables

English gardener an expert

If you're like me, you can't bear going through the summer without a vegetable garden. And you probably suffer through the first few weeks of worrying: will your veggies survive the heat, the bugs, the drought? the drought?

Hopefully everything is coming up tomatoes and peas and beans for you now. They are for Jimmy Storey.

Storey is something of a local vegetable king in Sedgfield, England, where he grows giant vegetables in his backyard with time-tested methods.

When he is not at his job, Storey is

Mary B. Good

Potting shed

in his garden making compost and tending his carrots and other root crops, which often grow over three-feet long. (Does Storey somehow make you green around the gills?)

HE DOESN'T guarantee that every gardener will produce giant vegetables the first time, but his tips will insure a high yield of good-tasting produce.

Storey uses dried blood, bone meal, wood ashes and grass clippings for compost to build up the soil. He feeds the soil about 15 bushels of compost or stable manure into each thousand square feet before planting. His soil is so rich it's almost fattening.

A beautiful garden gets lots of sun, and Storey makes sure his site is located where the veggies get six hours of direct sunlight daily. (That's very important!)

THIS GROWER OF mammoth vegetables suggests scattering wood ashes over the garden throughout the season to make the soil surface too scratchy for destructive crawling insects, like slugs and snails. "And don't work or walk over wet soil," he advises. (This promotes the spread of plant diseases and misshapen root vegetables.)

Some gardeners don't have success germinating seeds because they plant too deeply. A good rule of thumb is to sow three times as deep as the diameter of the seed. Dropping an extra pinch of bone meal or dried blood into each furrow will give seedlings a head start, but avoid planting seeds with unmixed fertilizer or the shoots will be burned.

Tiny seeds like lettuce and carrots, are devils to sow and need only a sprinkling of soil over them. Time is saved in the long run if you remember to make the effort to sow them thinly, seed by seed. This way you won't spend hours thinning them later.

ONE SECRET TO raising carrots is fine-textured, stone and weed-free soil which helps prevent growing carrots with "forked tongues." Don't let the soil crust over the carrot bed, also a precaution against deformed carrots.

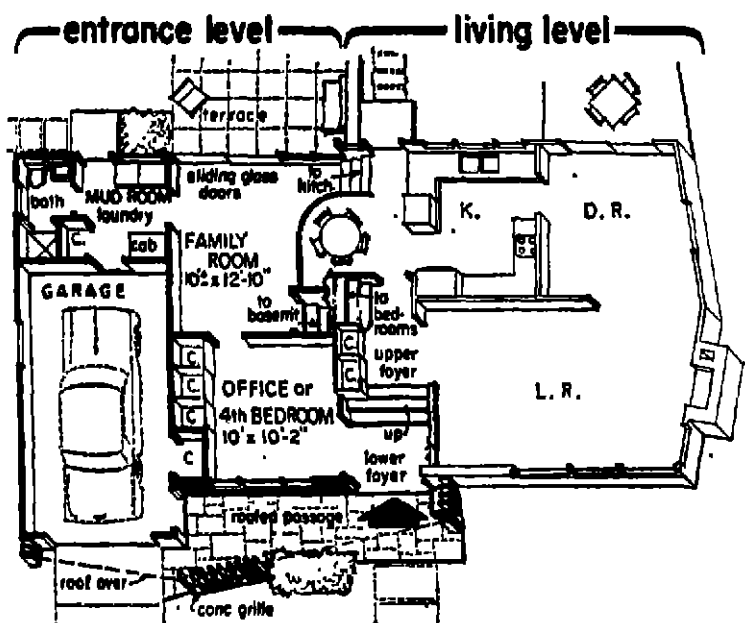

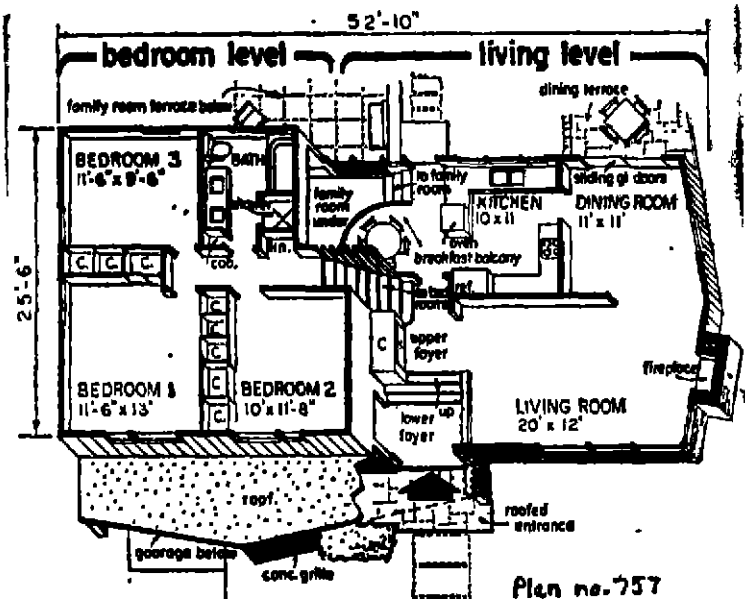

Too late for now, but the next time you buy onion sets pick the small ones; big sets produce seedstalks, big necks and undersized onions. Pick off any flower buds that form on onions to extend the growth of the bulb. If maggots are a problem, coat the top layer of soil with wood ashes. As an emergency measure, use radishes as trap plants. Radishes sprout very quickly and maggots prefer them to onions. When the radishes are infested with onion maggots, pull out the first batch of radishes and get rid of all your maggots.

Here's a cucumber tip that may prove useful, especially in the heat. Cukes like a straw mulch to stabilize the soil temperature and keep in moisture. Keep cucumber plants picked of fruit to encourage production of more fruit.

Lastly, don't overwater tomatoes, unless you like cracked fruit. If you let tomatoes sprawl, which produces a heavier yield than staking, be sure to mulch with straw under the branches to discourage pests.

HOW DOES YOUR GARDEN grow? Jimmy Storey, Sedgfield, England, grows giant vegetables yearly in his small, backyard garden. His yield includes three-foot leeks and four-foot carrots and parsnips.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth R. Thomas

Deborah Svoboda— Kenneth R. Thomas

A lavender and white color scheme surrounded Deborah L. Svoboda of Elk Grove Village for her May 4 marriage to Kenneth R. Thomas of Wood Dale.

The bridal attendants were all gowned alike in lavender dotted swiss with ruffled capes for the 3:30 p.m. candlelight ceremony in Church of the Holy Ghost, Wood Dale. They carried colonial bouquets of white and lavender daisies with baby's breath.

Debbie is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irwin L. Svoboda.

For the double-ring wedding she wore a gown of white knit jersey trimmed in Victorian lace studded with pearls. Her floor-length veil, edged in lace, was attached to a Juliet cap of lace and pearls. A cascade of phalaenopsis with lavender-tinted stephanotis and baby's breath made up her bouquet.

DEBBIE'S MAID of honor was Donna Peep, Elk Grove Village, and bridesmaids included the groom's sisters, twins Nancy and Linda Thomas; Connie Shorb, Plymouth, Mich.; Kim Sweezer, Schaumburg; and Debbie's cousins, Janet Kalal, Mount Prospect, and Donna Buscher, Rochester, Minn.

Ken is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George R. Thomas. He chose James Soboleski, Glendale Heights, his business partner in Geneva Lumber Co., Chicago, as best man and groomsmen were another business partner, Mike Hermes, Chicago; his cousin, Casey Czaja, Chicago; John Flaska and Pete Calcagno, Chicago; Bruce Smith, Elk Grove; and the bride's brother, Scott Svoboda.

Special guests at the nuptials were Debbie's grandparents, Mrs. Marie Svoboda, Berwyn, and the John Snyders, Delavan, Wis.; her great-grandfather, William Brieger, Naperville; and Ken's grandparents, Mrs. Mary Sobota, Chicago, and the Alton Thomases, Fancy Farm, Ky.

AFTER A dinner-dance reception for 200 at Mr. Duke's, Wood Dale, and a week's honeymoon in Bermuda, the newlyweds are living in Itasca.

Debbie graduated in '70 from Elk Grove High School, then from Harper College, and attended Northern Illinois University. Her husband is a graduate of Loyola University.

Weddings

Carol Bratt— Ray Anderson III

When Carol Jean Bratt of Arlington Heights was in the hospital for back surgery early last year, a young man she met through her roommate came to see her often, and a romance developed. On May 14 in Winnetka Covenant Church, Carol became the bride of that faithful visitor, Raymond Anderson III of Skokie.

Carol is the daughter of Mrs. Roy Oberg, who with Mr. Oberg hosted the dinner reception for 210 guests that followed at Old Orchard Country Club, Mount Prospect. Ray is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Anderson Jr. of Morton Grove.

For the 4:30 candlelight ceremony Carol wore an ivory chiffon gown appliqued with lace roses and a chapel-length veil attached to a lace crown. She carried white roses, carnations, daisies and stephanotis.

Mrs. Randa LaSalvia, Libertyville, was matron of honor in a blue polyester gown with matching chiffon cape trimmed in white daisies. Her bouquet was of white and blue daisies, blue cornflowers and baby's breath.

THE BRIDESMAIDS were Julie Wallgren, Glenview, cousin of the bride, Chris Hoeffer, Schaumburg; and her sister-in-law, Carol Brott, Arlington Heights. They were gowned like the matron of honor but wore picture hats to complete their ensembles. Theresa Sardina, 8, the groom's cousin from Oak Park, was flower girl in white eyelet over yellow.

The groom's brother, Terry of Northbrook, was best man. Brothers of the bride, Paul Brott, Arlington, and Dr. Tom Brott, Boston, along with the groom's cousin, Vincent Krocka, Chicago, and Carol's cousin, Scott Wallgren, Aurora, were groomsmen. Five-year-old Matthew Brott, Arlington, the bride's nephew, was ring bearer.

At the reception, Carol presented her bouquet to her grandmother, Mrs. Eric Wallgren of Northbrook, in honor of the Wallgren's 60th wedding anniversary May 12.

Carol and Ray honeymooned for a week in Wisconsin and are at home in Skokie. She is a licensed practical nurse at Brandel Care Center, Northbrook, and Ray is with Illinois Bell Telephone Co., Chicago. Carol attended Triton College in River Forest before going to work.

Stress quality at barn sale

A three-day barn sale — of quality merchandise — will be held at 718 N. Evergreen, Arlington Heights, June 23, 24 and 25.

All proceeds will go to the Volunteer Service Bureau located at 301 W. South St., Arlington Heights. The Bureau is a non-profit organization that recruits volunteers and matches their skills and interests with the needs of local agencies, community programs and schools.

Only the best of used articles, whether antiques, household goods or clothing, will be offered at the sale. Volunteers are needed to sort out and stack contributions that are being accepted daily.

Anyone wishing to donate merchandise may request pickup by calling 398-1320, 541-1517 or 439-4884. Those willing to help with the sale may call the same phone numbers.

Bonita Berg— Fabian Bishop Jr.

After a week's honeymoon in the Bahamas, Fabian Joseph Bishop Jr. of Palatine and his bride, the former Bonita Marie Berg of Addison, are making their home in Palatine. The couple was married April 30 at 2 p.m. in St. Tarcisus Church, Chicago.

Bonita is the daughter of Mrs. Anna Marie Berg, Chicago, and Calvin Berg, Des Plaines. Her sister, Beverly Ann, was her honor attendant for the candlelight, double ring ceremony.

The groom's niece, Laura Chittenden, 4, of Powell, Tenn., was flower girl.

FABIAN, SON of Mrs. Fabian J. Bishop and the late Mr. Bishop, chose Patrick Kelly, Memphis, Tenn., as best man and the bride's brother, Kenneth, as usher.

Following the ceremony the couple greeted 85 guests at a reception at the Ralshkeller Restaurant, Norridge.

Bonita, who attended Northern Illinois University, works for Rohn Porcelain in Elmhurst. Fabian attended Memphis State University and is now manager of Walgreen's in Yorktown Mall, Lombard.

The doctor says

Reader suggests warning on X ray

I read your column about acne and found it very interesting. Interesting in the way you mentioned different approaches to its treatment.

You left out the most important warning, to avoid radiation as a treatment under any circumstances.

I was radiated with 1,000 rads to my face and neck during World War II for acne. It didn't cure the disease, just burned the skin like a severe sun burn. This radiation was given over a two-month period.

The net result was carcinoma of the thyroid 22 years later. In this large county of ours who is to say some doctor may not be using X rays for the treatment of acne.

It is true that X rays were used to treat acne. So were a lot of other things that I would not recommend — possibly a list longer than your paper would care to publish.

It is also true that X-rays to the face and neck area in significant amounts can cause cancer of the thyroid. Let it suffice to say that there are sufficient effective treatments for acne today that I would think no one would be using X ray treatment for this purpose anymore.

Readers who want a complete discussion of the current treatment for acne, black heads and white heads can send 50 cents for the Health Letter number 8-2, Acne Can Be Treated. Send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing.

I am writing to you in regard to eating ice. I have been eating ice for the past 20 years. I have gone to several doctors, but they can't help. They tried several kinds of medicine but failed.

I stop for three days and nearly pass out. We have plenty of good cold water without my eating ice, and ice seems to make my kidneys bad. I just get in bed from the bathroom and have to go again. This keeps up until midnight and I can't sleep. I'm hungry all the time. I'm 66 years of age. I hope you can help me.

On the surface your story sounds like "pica." The best known example of this is children picking off paint from old buildings. When it is a lead-based paint, that can cause lead poisoning.

The same term applies to people who eat lots of clay, laundry starch and other items. Some people have been known to eat clay like others eat ice cream.

Eating ice is a common form of pica. There are reports of people eating over 9,000 grams (about 20 pounds) of ice daily. Dr. William H. Crosby discussed this last year in the Journal of the American Medical Association (235: 2765, 1976). He and others have determined that the usual cause of pica is an iron deficiency.

These people like yourself do not need to have an iron deficiency anemia. When they replace their iron, the pica goes away, and frequently the person develops an aversion to the food item that was the big crave when the iron deficiency was present.

Why don't you start taking iron? I am sure your doctors have checked you for diabetes, which can cause a person to be thirsty and hungry, but diabetics with this advanced stage of the disease usually drink water rather than eating ice.

Because of the volume of mail Dr. Lamb cannot answer your letters personally but he will answer representative letters of general interest in his column. Write to him in care of Paddock Publications, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019.

Fiberglass in wash leaves her itching

Dear Dorothy: I washed some curtains in my washing machine and, forgetting they were fiberglass, I washed a load of regular clothes. Now I have these bits of fiber in everything and it is itching me to death. Does anyone have any kind of solution of getting the fibers out of the clothes? — Mrs. Gertrude McCarty

What I'm about to suggest is purely experimental. Reason I often ask for playback from readers is to pile up evidence. One reader did respond on this problem and reported success in soaking the wash in straight vinegar, then rewashing. She said all the bits of glass were gone. One correspondent said the glass came out when an electric sweeper was run over the clothes. A chemist suggested tumble-drying with no heat and a bunch of rags included. His theory was that the fiberglass would attach to the rags which could then be thrown away. Never found out whether anyone tried that.

Dear Dorothy: Bought a lovely table at a garage sale, but after I got it home noticed that one of the legs wasn't quite level. It took a little while before I thought of siling off a piece of cork from a bottle cork. Perfect! Made my day. — Alice Flint

Dear Dorothy: When I make muffins in paper cups, part of the muffins stick to the paper. Suggestions, please. — Sally Wilford

A muffin maker says you probably need a bit more shortening in the batter.

Dear Dorothy: I'm told that you have written about a solution one can keep on hand to use on carpeting when one has the problem of dogs and children running in and out. I'm in that fix now and need the recipe. — Barbara Kelso

All you have to do is dissolve one-fourth cup of mild detergent and one-fourth cup of white vinegar in a quart of water. Usually, just a quick swipe with a sponge dampened in this solution and the stain will be gone. But keep in mind always that the quicker one gets to a carpet stain, the better chance there is of removing it.

A. Oehlerkings wed 50 years

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Oehlerking

Alvin Oehlerking and Malinda Busse were bound to meet at one event or another in the early 1900s, since both were born and reared on farms in the area, Alvin in Des Plaines and Malinda in Arlington Heights.

They did meet, at a wedding, and eventually were married May 29, 1927 in St. Paul Lutheran Church, Mount Prospect. In 1930 the young couple moved into a home on South Elm in Mount Prospect and have lived there ever since.

Alvin's parents, the Henry Oehlerkings, owned a farm on property now at the corner of Rand and Central roads. He was born in 1901. Malinda, daughter of the Louis F. Busses, was born in 1906 and grew up on a farm on Algonquin road.

THEY CELEBRATED their golden wedding day on the exact anniversary this past May at the Camelot Restaurant, Des Plaines. The dinner party included their two daughters and families, Doris Feibinger of Itasca and Eileen Kehe of Arlington Heights. The Oehlerkings have four grandchildren.

Alvin retired in 1970 as supervisor for John Plain & Co., Chicago.

Next on the agenda

NATURE BOOKMARK

Make a nifty nature bookmark with dried flowers, construction paper, and clear contact paper! First, gather small flowers and leaves. "Flat" flowers such as pansies work better than "thick" ones like marigolds. Also pick some small leaves. Ferns are especially nice. Press flowers and leaves between paper towels in a big book for a few days.

Cut out a long thin construction paper bookmark. Cut a piece of contact paper the same size. Lay flowers and leaves on the construction paper. Move them around until you like the arrangement. Peel off the contact backing. Press the contact over the flowers. Now find a good book to read!

Win at bridge

Club play proves important

Here is a prosaic one-notrump contract taken from the Lukacs-Rubens book. This is the sort of hand that occurs day in and day out and produces a lot of extra tricks for those who know how to take the best line of play.

West opens the queen of diamonds and continues with the jack after South plays low. South plays low again. He has decided that West didn't lead from ace-queen-jack and hopes that East will have to play the ace. The ace doesn't appear and a third diamond is led. East wins and returns the 10 of spades and it is up to South to find a way to score seventricks.

He counts and sees that the club finesse must succeed in any event and decides to tackle clubs immediately. He wins the spade in dummy and must select the right club to lead.

The right one is the nine. If he leads low he can only play that one club from dummy; if he leads the jack and East plays low he can lead a second club, but that will be all.

When he plays the nine he is sure of four club tricks provided East holds the king.

art of cave exploring

Andy sends the Encyclopedia Britannica's 1977 Yearbook of Science and the Future to Kevin Bradshaw, 11, of Mooresville, Ind., for his question:

WHAT IS A SPELEOLOGIST?

When you mention the word speleology, you're talking about caves. The most extensive system of caves in the world is found at Mammoth Cave National Park in Kentucky. It was discovered in '9. Dr. John Wilcox and a group of plorers on Sept. 9, 1972, completed a connection between the Flint Ridge Cave system and the Mammoth Cave system, making a combined system with a mapped passageway 157 miles long.

Speleology is a word given to the systematic exploration of caves. A speleologist is a person who is engaged in this type of work.

Cave exploration is popularly called spelunking and those involved have been given the name of spelunkers. And it is a fascinating business! Included is the measuring and mapping of caves and recording information about the fauna and flora found in them.

The deepest cave in the world is 3,842 feet. It's called the Resaca de la Pierre Saint-Martin, and it is located in the Pyrennes between Spain and France. Second honors go to Gouffre Berger on the Somrin Plateau in Vercors, France. This cave is 3,743 feet deep. Close behind in third spot is Italy's Abisso Michele Gortani, going down 3,018 feet deep.

Spelunkers have discovered that the longest stalactite—a column of stone that points downward from the roof of a cave—is a wall-supported column 195 feet long from roof to floor in the Cueva de Nerja in Spain. The longest free-hanging stalactite—they have low tensile strength because they are formed of calcium carbonate and never get too long—can be seen in the 38-foot example in the Poll on Ionain cave in Ireland.

Speleologists have also come up with a record-breaking stalagmite—a column of stone that extends from the cave's floor and goes upward. Winner with a height of 99 feet is the La Grande Stalagmite in the Aven Armand cave in France, which was found in 1897.

Holding the record for staying down in a cave for the longest period of time is spelunker Mihutin Veljkovic of Yugoslavia. He stayed in the Samnar Cavern, located in the Svrlij Mountains of northern Yugoslavia, for a total of 463 days. He started his stay on June 24, 1969, and emerged from the scientific study Sept. 30, 1970.

Andy sends a Denoyer-Geppert World Globe to Banni Russell, 15, of Burgess, Va., for her question:

WHO INVENTED THE CANDLE?

Candles are small columns of wax, paraffin, tallow or other fatty material surrounding a wick. They offer light for rooms that are without electricity, and also add a lot of glamor when used on a dining table. And what would a birthday cake be without candles?

Candles were found in Herculaneum, the ancient city on the Bay of Naples that was buried along with Pompeii in A.D. 79 by the eruption of Mount Vesuvius. There is also a candle in London's British Museum reportedly made in the 1st Century, although candles were not mentioned in any writings before the end of the 2nd Century.

We don't know who invented the candle, but we do know there was little advance in the art of candle-making until the process of molding was introduced in the 15th Century.

Do you have a question to Ask Andy? Send it on a post card with your name, age and complete address to Ask Andy in care of The Herald, P. O. Box 288, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60004. Entries are open to boys and girls 7 to 17.

Mikhail's magic a part of virtuoso night

by LYNN ASINOF
A Review
The Hungarian dancers have magnificent and pliant bodies, the Canadians displayed impressive poise, the Chicago debut of 18-year-old Patrick DuPont was thrilling, and yet, Mikhail Baryshnikov stole the show.

The opening of the First North American International Dance Festival Thursday was overwhelming. It was full of bravura dancing, flashy footwork and a list of performers that could fill the who's who of dance.

In fact, it was almost too much. With so many superb dancers packed into one short evening, there wasn't enough time to mentally digest the performances. Nine separate ballets were presented, featuring 13 virtuoso dancers, not to mention the Chicago Ballet, which has never looked better.

SIMILAR PROGRAMS fill all three days of the festival, which runs through tonight at the Opera House.

The festival has brought the best in the world of dance to Chicago, thanks to Chicago Ballet president Geraldine Freund. She wanted to put Chicago on the cultural map, and she succeeded, filling the audience with as many stars as appeared on the stage.

But amidst the brilliance, I wished I could have divided the evening's program in two, cut the cost of the tickets in half and spread the event over two evenings.

Such an approach also would have been heartily endorsed by Chicago dance enthusiasts who could not afford the $30 price tag for prime seats.

So they settled for the balconies, leaving empty seats on the main floor.

THE EVENING'S major event was Baryshnikov's American debut in Balanchine's "The Prodigal Son," a lusty and grotesque version of the Biblical parable.

Baryshnikov's interpretation of the youth lured to adventure was achingly innocent, and his suffering at the end of the piece was poignant. The Chicago dancers did an acceptable job, but often failed to sustain the momentum of the ballet.

The piece looked under-rehearsed in spots, lacking the easy lifts and smooth transitions that come with familiarity. These rough spots seemed to interrupt Baryshnikov's interpretation. Ghislaine Thesmar as the Siren had a piercing style, but lacked the necessary sinister sensuality.

While "The Prodigal Son" gave the audience a look at Baryshnikov's superb acting ability, "Le Corsaire" displayed his virtuoso technique. Dancing with Noella Pontolis of the Paris Opera, he performed astonishing leaps, turns and beats, giving a dramatic edge to a ballet that is not among his favorites.

Jamison, black goddess of the Alvin Ailey troupe, whose magnetic stage presence was not enough to overcome the insubstantial choreography of John Butler's "Facets." The piece was more mime than movement, and Jamison deserved better.

Canadians Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn presented an unfussy and pleasing "Blue Bird" pas de deux from "Sleeping Beauty." Aurora Bosch, Josefina Mendez and Jorge Esquivel of the National Ballet of Cuba showed more strength than subtlety in a pas de trois from "Swan Lake."

Hideo Fukagawa filled in for the Royal Ballet dancers who left their music for "Romeo and Juliet" in London. He performed "The Wooden Prince," a three-minute splash of energetic hip gyrations, contorted turns and taut leaps.

Finally, there was the Chicago Ballet, looking like the energetic professional troupe it claims to be. James Clouser's "Con Spirito," performed with a live orchestra on a large stage, took on style and form never before exhibited by the Chicago troupe.

And that perhaps was the most important part of the festival. After the big name stars leave, the Chicago dancers will remain with memories of a glorious moment which was partly theirs.

Energy search tilts to windmills

but in terms of real power, they were limited," said Ben Wolff, Windwork's spokesman and executive director of the American Wind Energy Assn.

SO WINDWORKS began studying the old wind generators used and 1950. The group took several in rural America between 1930 trips through the Dakotas, Iowa and other states where windmills were a source of power before the rural electrification program. Today, the group is concentrating exclusively on engineering consulting work.

One Windworks project led to the development of the Gemini synchronous inverter, designed to solve the problem of storage.

"Typically these alternative energy sources are intermittent. They are not always available when you need them. The problem is storage," Wolff explained, saying that in the past people had stored the electricity in lead-acid batteries similar to car batteries.

"Previously you would store the power in batteries as DC and run it through a static inverter when you need it," Wolff said, explaining the electricity must be changed from direct current to alternating current before it can be used. "With the synchronous inverter, we eliminate the storage because it goes right to your AC line."

Solar heat is energy wave of future

and Urban Development and the Energy Research and Development Administration, also put out lists.

BUT, AS OF yet, there are no standards for the industry, and that means there are no ratings. The buyer has to do his own research into what makes a good solar product and few firms offer guarantees.

Butt said many of the bugs have been taken out of solar heating equipment. While there will be some technological advances, he said most will merely be refinements of present concepts.

"There are two things that need to be done and will be done on a gradual basis. One is to gradually improve the efficiency of the equipment," Butt said, noting he expects efficiency to improve at a rate of 2 per cent a year.

"The other is to refine the mechanical design," Butt said referring to changes that will come with mass production. He said such refinements include the replacement of screws with pop rivets and other manufacturing processes that speed production and reduce price.

ONE OF THE biggest debates in the solar industry is between air and water systems. The majority of solar products today are designed to use water, which flows through the collector and picks up heat.

While water systems are more efficient, they are also more expensive. Heat is stored in water tanks, which are costly, and leaks in the system can cause water damage. Although the plumbing is compact, requiring minimal space, no data is available on how long a water system will last.

By comparison, air systems take up a lot of room and are less efficient. They are also less expensive. Air is blown through the collectors to pick up heat, which is stored in an insulated bin of pebbles. The bin is less expensive than a water storage tank but takes much more space. Leaks in air systems are hard to detect, but cause little damage.

Miller said his company is getting a lot of attention because it is one of the relatively few making air systems. "There aren't that many of us. Air systems are very difficult to develop to make them as efficient as the liquid systems," he said. "But the real key is still the BTU's per dollar spent."

THE BOTTOM LINE is economics. Solar heating is catching on fastest in places where conventional fuels are most expensive.

In the Chicago area, energy is still relatively cheap, but a state study estimates rates will go up at a rate of about 4 per cent a year above general inflation rates. That will make solar heating competitive with other forms of heating by 1980-85.

The state study, based on the cost of systems over a 15 year period, says an electric furnace system installed in Springfield in 1976 will cost $9,510. A solar assisted electric furnace will cost $9,704.

By 1980, however, the electric furnace cost will increase to $10,850 while the solar assisted life-cycle cost will be only $9,407.

In some parts of the country, solar heating can provide 100 per cent of heating needs. In Chicago, it can only provide 60 per cent, with a back-up system providing the rest.

But the industry is banking on the fact that 60 per cent is going to be a big savings in the future. Just ask Stephen Miller.

Providing relief of different sort

by MILTON RICHMAN
NEW YORK (UPI) —For years, every time they called his name, they'd hand Ron Taylor a baseball and tell him to go out there and do what he could to save someone.

Today it'll be a little different. They're still hoping he'll save someone, but instead of a baseball they'll hand him a diploma at the University of Toronto Medical School's commencement exercises for the Class of 1977 this afternoon. And as soon as he receives it he'll be automatically certified as a medical doctor.

TAYLOR HAD TO put in a lot of sweat and hard work to become one. At 30, he's the oldest graduate in his class.

"I feel kind of relieved," he says.

"Now I want to become a competent physician."

Taylor pitched 10 years in the big leagues, almost entirely in relief. He was with the Indians, Cardinals, Astros, Mets, Expos and Padres spanning a period from 1962 to 1972, during which time he was credited with 60 saves and 45 victories while working in 481 games.

Between baseball seasons, he earned an engineering degree, quite a trick in itself.

"WHEN I SIGNED with Cleveland, I was only 17, and after I won 17 games for Daytona Beach in the Florida State League in my first year out I talked with Laddie Placek and Hoot Evers, who were with the Indians, and told them I wanted to finish high school and then go to engineering school," Taylor remembers.

"They said that was perfectly okay with them as long as I'd report to the team I'd be assigned to after finishing my school term each year. So for the next five years I went from Class D to Triple-A without ever going to spring training."

After getting his engineering degree, Taylor, a Toronto native, became interested in medical electronics.

"Things like diagnostic X-rays and electrocardiograms," he says. "My interest was stimulated when I was part of a group of bailplayers Art Richman of the Mets took to visit military hospitals in Southeast Asia. I made that trip twice and was part of another group Waite Hoyt took to visit hospitals in Vietnam."

TAYLOR FOUND medical school "very tough" — much more so than engineering school.

It's routine; Cubs win, 3-1

by ART MUGALIAN

You have to understand one thing about Cub manager Herman Franks: he loves to platoon. Put in a lefty and he'll pinch-hit a righty. Start a right-hander and he'll use his lefthanded outfield.

There's just one problem. Herman has two lefthanded first basemen. And one of them is a walking cripple.

SO THAT MEANS Larry Bittner is playing just about every day, which is something the Cub journeyman isn't too experienced at.

But he's loving it. At Wrigley Field Friday, Bittner slammed two hits, including his 10th double, drove in a run and scored another as the Cubs thumped San Francisco again, this time 3-1 behind the route-going performance of Rick (I-Can-Do-It) Reuschel.

The victory, the Cubs' fourth in five games on the current homestand, preserved their three-game bulge in the National League East and moved them to a nice, round 15 games over .500 at 34-19.

SPEAKING OF averages, Bittner is now hitting .304 after his big day Friday, during which he singled and scored on Bobby Murcer's double in the fifth and sent home Ivan DeJesus with his own two-base hit in the seventh.

It was also back to first base for Bittner after starting three games in left field this week.

"I don't give a darn where I play," said Bittner, who started out in the old Washington Senators' system 10 years ago. "As long as my name's in the lineup, that's all that matters. Playing first base is more fun because you're in the action more, but I'm perfectly willing to play anywhere."

Franks gave the sore-ankled Bill Buckner a rest Friday and put Gene Clines in left to face Giant starter Bob Knepper, a winless (and, until Friday, lossless) rookie lefthander. But Bittner had to be penciled in too.

"WHAT ELSE can I do?" asked the Cub boss. "I have no choice. Besides, Bittner has been hitting lefties all year."

So have the Cubs, for that matter. Knepper, who lasted six innings before yielding to a pinch-hitter, became the Cubs' 15th lefthanded victim this season. Only four southpaws have beaten the North Siders.

Knepper could have been one of them except that he got in trouble in the first when DeJesus chopped a hit over Bill Madlock's head at third and promptly stole second base. Two outs later, Jerry Morales lined a single to left and DeJesus scored.

Bittner opened the fifth with a ground hit through the box and came home on Murcer's vicious double to right center. But that was all Knepper allowed.

BITTNER'S DOUBLE to the wall in left center in the seventh off righty Charlie Williams sent around an insurance run that probably saved Reuschel's complete game. Rick, who gave up an unearned run in the top of the seventh on a Manny Trillo error and a hit by pinch hitter Terry Whitfield, scattered four hits but showed signs of tiring after settling down 15 Giants in a row from the second to the sixth.

Franks paid him a visit during the seventh to see how the right arm felt, keeping the name of Bruce Sulter somewhere near the front of his consciousness.

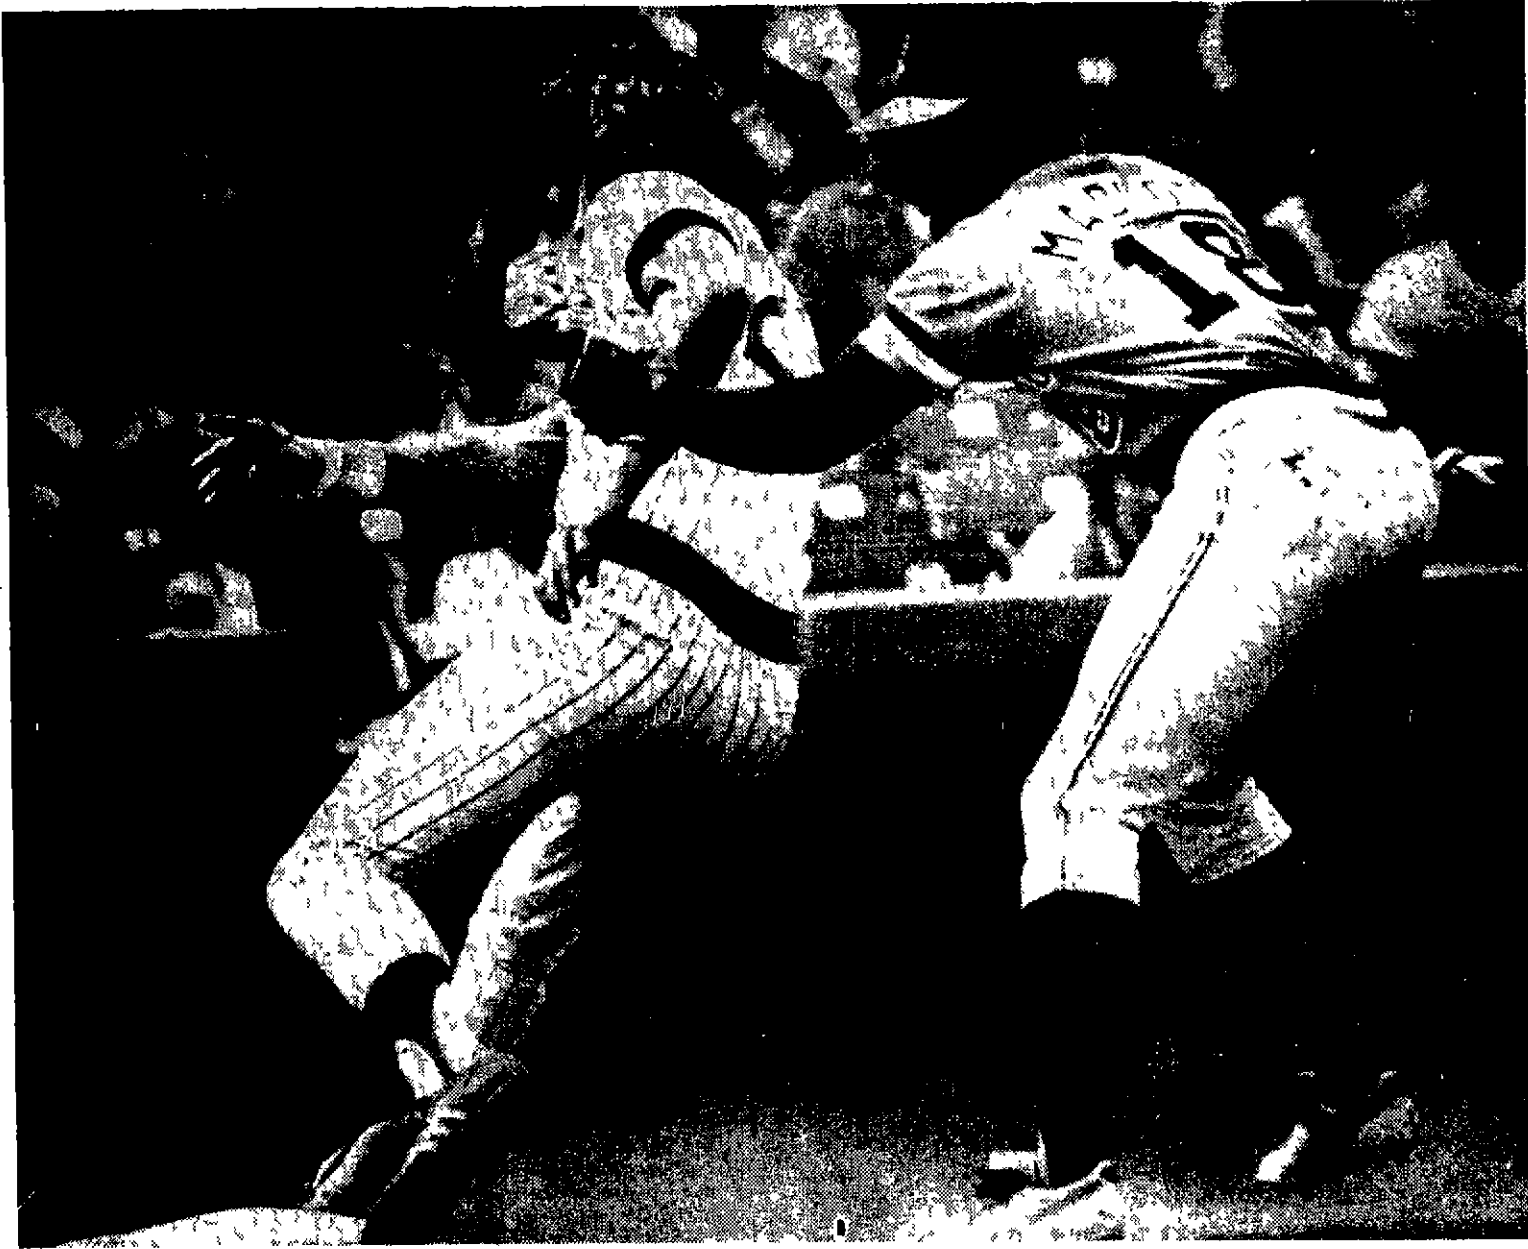

"I told him I said I felt pretty good," said Reuschel, now 8-2 with two complete games. "When I came in after the seventh, he told me that if anybody got on base, he was bringing him (Sulter) in."

Relief wasn't necessary although Rick went to 3-and-0 on Willie McCovey to lead off the ninth. But Reuschel, still working fast and throwing hard, came back and fanned 39-year-old Willie on a 3-2 slider. It was his seventh strikeout.

REUSCHEL WAS pleased with his nine-inning skint, his first route job since April 28. "At least I know I can still do it," Rick quipped. But he was less than happy with his control.

"My curve was good — when I could get it over," he said. "I was getting the change-up over the plate though."

"I don't know if I'm in the groove now," added Rick. "The groove's too easy to get out of. But this is probably the best start I've ever got off to — I can't think of a better one."

TAG DAY. Ex-Cub Bill Madlock, now a mean San Francisco Giant, puts the tag on Cub baserunner Larry Bittner, who was caught leaning the wrong way by Giant catcher Ken Rudolph, another former Cub, in the seventh. Bittner had just doubled home Ivan DeJesus to give the Cubs a 3-1 lead Friday at Wrigley Field, but he was thrown out from Rudolph to shortstop Tim Lincecum to Madlock at third.

Orioles coast past White Sox, 6-1

BALTIMORE, Md. — The White Sox, fighting off nagging injuries and fatigue, managed only five hits off Baltimore pitcher Mike Flanagan here Friday night, dropping a 6-1 decision to the Orioles.

Flanagan had given up but three scattered hits going into the ninth inning when the Sox added two more singles but did not score.

Steve Stone started for the Sox and went the distance but took the loss, his second in a row after winning five in a row. Stone is now 6-5.

AFTER WINNING 4-3 in a 4½-hour, 11-inning marathon, the jet-weary Sox didn't arrive here until 6:30 Friday morning.

The Sox lineup underwent some changes as righthander Oscar Gamble started in left field in place of the lefthanded hitting Ralph Garr against the left handed offerings of Flanagan. Righty Wayne Nordhagen played right field while slumping Richie Zisk, the regular rightfielder, took over at designated hitter. The change didn't help Zisk's bat. He went 0-for-3 and is now hitless in his last 15 at bats.

Righthander Lamar Johnson started at first in place of the lefthanded Jim Spencer, but the switch had nothing to do with righty-lefty percentages. Spencer fouled a ball off his right foot in Texas Thursday and X-Rays revealed his has a broken big toe.

Spencer has been placed on the 15-day disabled list and will be replaced on the roster by third-baseman Kevin Bell.

CATCHER JIM Essian was also scratched from the starting lineup due to a pulled thigh muscle and Brian Downing filled in.

Baltimore took a 1-0 lead in the first when Stone wild pitched in a run and made it 2-0 in the fourth when a pair of infield singles and a sharp single to left by catcher Rick Dempsey blossomed into a run.

The Sox came back with a run in the fifth when Flanagan gave up a pair of walks and Alan Bannister singled home a run.

But the Orioles put the game out of reach in the bottom of the fifth when Stone gave up a walk, a single and another walk to load the bases. Doug DeCinces doubled to left and all three runs scored as Gamble juggled the ball in left for an error.

THE ORIOLES final run came in the eighth when Billy Smith singled home a run to make it 6-1.

Walks were Stone's biggest problem. The righthander walked five and three of the walks ended up scoring.

Flanagan, who was knocked in two innings when Baltimore playing in Comiskey Park last week, broke a personal four-game losing streak and is now 2-5. The win also snapped a Baltimore 14-game losing streak.

The Sox didn't lose any ground and remained in second, two games behind Minnesota who lost in New York Friday.

SOX SHORTS: Kevin Bell is expected to arrive in time for tonight's game against the Orioles, which is scheduled for 6:30 p.m., Chicago time. At Iowa, Bell was hitting .302 in 48 games with 12 home runs, a triple and nine doubles. The popular third baseman spent the second half of the season with the Sox last year and has also been playing shortstop and the outfield this season.

Bulls take Duke guard Armstrong

From Herald Wire Services

Tate Armstrong, a 6-foot-3 guard from Duke University, was the Bulls' first pick Friday in the National Basketball Assn. college player draft.

Armstrong, a product of the rugged Atlantic Coast Conference who is known for his shooting skills, was the 13th player selected on the first round.

Kent Benson of Indiana, as expected, was picked No. 1 by the Milwaukee Bucks and immediately signed to a six-year contract.

KANSAS CITY followed Milwaukee's first choice by selecting Houston guard Otis Birdsong, and Milwaukee used their other first-round selections to grab Marques Johnson of UCLA and Ernie Grunfeld of Tennessee.

The Bulls picked up Southern Illinois University sharpshooter Mike Glenn (6-3), 6-8 Steve Sheppard of Maryland and 6-7 Mark Landsberger of Arizona State on the second round.

Other Bulls' selections Friday were 6-2 Mike McConally of Louisiana Tech, 6-5 Nate Davis of South Carolina, 6-8 Jay Chessman of Brigham Young, 6-6 Mike Smith of Evansville and 6-2 Rich Rhodes of Eastern Illinois.

OTHER FIRST-round choices in the NBA Friday were 6-7 Greg Ballard of Oregon (Washington), 6-5 Walter Davis of North Carolina (Phoenix), 6-7 Kenny Carr of North Carolina St. (Los Angeles), 6-6 Bernard King of Tennessee (New York Nets), 6-11 Jack Sikma of Illinois Wesleyan (Seattle), 6-10 Tom LeGarde of North Carolina (Denver), 6-2 Ray Williams of Minnesota (New York Knicks), 6-8 Cedrix Maxwell of North Carolina-Charlotte (Boston), 7-1 Wayne Rollins of Maryland (Los Angeles), 6-2 Rick Green of Michigan (Golden State), 6-9 Bo Ellis of Marquette (Washington), 6-5 Wesley Cox of Louisville (Golden State), 6-6 Rich Laurel of Hofstra (Portland), 6-8 Glenn Mosley of Seton Hall (Philadelphia), 6-5 Anthony Roberts of Oral Roberts (Denver) and 6-2 Norm Nixon of Duquesne (Los Angeles).

Other Midwest stars drafted by the pros were 7-0 Jeff Wilkins of Illinois State (San Antonio), 6-2½ Steve Grote of Michigan (Cleveland), 6-8 Bruce King of Iowa (Detroit), 6-3½ Matt Hicks of Northern Illinois (San Antonio), 6-3½ Ron Norwood of DePaul (Milwaukee), 6-2 Bruce Parkinson of Purdue (Washington), 6-5 John Robinson of Michigan (Los Angeles), 6-0 Billy McKinney of Northwestern (Phoenix), and 6-8½ Tom Scheffler of Purdue (Indiana).

Will Triple Crown fit Seattle Slew?

by CHRIS SCHERF

NEW YORK (UPI) — Hoping the rain will be able to beat Seattle Slew, something none of his peers have been able to do, nine owners were bold enough to enter today's 109th running of the Belmont Stakes against the Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner.

However, these hearty souls may turn a bit faint-hearted if today turns out sunny and pleasant as is being forecast. A steady rain all Thursday morning turned the track into slop and engendered a field which would be larger than any assembled against a Triple Crown champion in the Belmont.

Of course, Seattle Slew still must win the Belmont to become the 10th Triple Crown champion and the first with an undefeated record.

HOWEVER, THIS year's race shapes up quite similar to last year's in which Angel Cordero opened up a big lead with Bold Forbes and then held on for the victory, although his colt was in dire straits to last the entire 1½-mile distance.

This year Cordero will ride Iron Constitution, who finished second to Seattle Slew in the Preakness, but without a lot of optimism.

"I don't think any horse can stay with him (Seattle Slew) early," said Cordero, who tried that tactic in the Kentucky Derby aboard For The Moment. The Puerto Rican jockey envisions another front-running victory, just like last year.

Referring to last year's 'betcha can't catch me victory by Bold Forbes, trainer Steve DiMauro said, "Seattle Slew might do the same thing." DiMauro trains Meadow Stable's Spirit Level, who was raced only five times and is stepping up considerably in class in the Belmont.

"IT SOUNDS crazy," DiMauro admitted. "But last week he beat Sanhedrin, who at that point was the horse given the best chance of beating Seattle Slew. So you can say I was almost forced to enter the horse."

Ironically, Meadow Stable owner Mrs. Penny (Tweedy) Ringquist had the most recent of the nine Triple Crown winners in Secretariat, who swept all three jewels in 1973.

Spirit Level may be stepping up considerably, but the reasons for his being in the Belmont against Seattle Slew are understandable. A bit more mystifying were the entries of LaLuna Stable's Sir Sir, Elaine Brodsky's Leading Scorer, John Greer's Mr. Red Wing and the Johnny Campo-trained entry of Fast Pierina's Hey Hey J. P. and Elmendorf's Make Amends. Those five horses were listed at 50-1 in the early line, Seattle Slew was an overwhelming 1-5 favorite.

Asked about the surprising number of entries, DiMauro said, "I would have to think the rain had a lot to do with that. It doesn't cost anything to enter but you have to put up $1,000 to run, so I think you might see some scratches if it clears up."

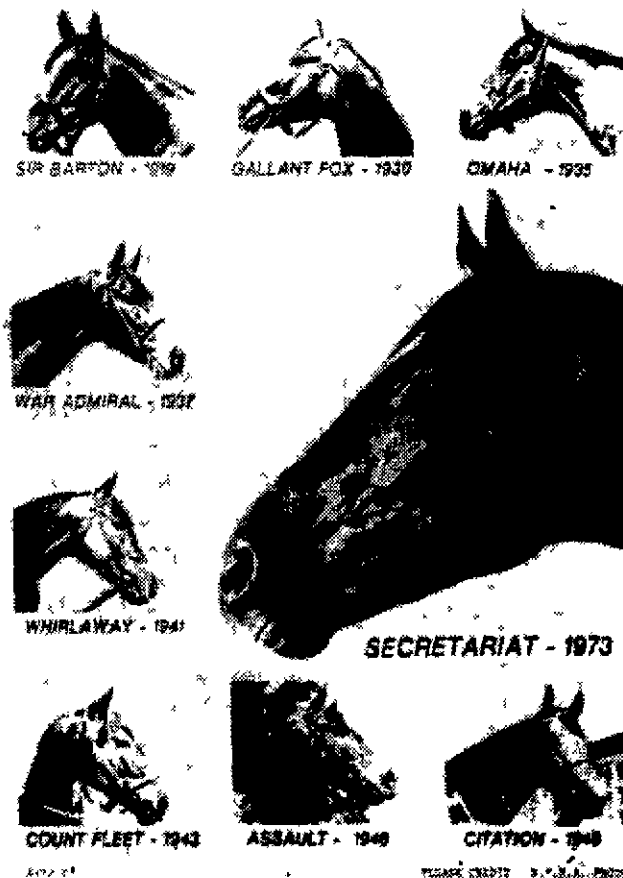

SEATTLE SLEW, who will be ridden by Jean Cruguet, figures to receive his stiffest competition from Golden Chance Farm's Run Dusty Run, who finished second in the Kentucky Derby and third in the Preakness, and Darby Dan Farm's Sanhedrin.

Trainer Smiley Adams was not pleased with Darrel McHargue's performances aboard Run Dusty Run in the Derby and the Preakness, so Canadian Sandy Hawley will be aboard in the Belmont.

Sanhedrin, second to Seattle Slew in the Wood and third in the Kentucky Derby, will be ridden by Jorge Velasquez, who will be wearing a cast to protect the hairline ankle fractures in the same spill which sidelined Steve Cauthen.

If all 10 horses entered make it to the 4.42 p.m. post, the Belmont will be worth $183,800 with a winner's purse of $110,260.

Citation faced seven rivals in winning his Triple Crown title in 1948, but the other eight have faced less. Secretariat only had four rivals in his 31-length record victory in 1973. Sir Barton (1919) and Count Fleet (1943) only had two opponents.

Wide-open Greene attracts nine

A field of nine, including a stable coupling, was drawn Friday for today's first running of the $25,000 Sheeky Greene Handicap, a sprint at seven furlongs to be run over Arlington Park's main track.

If all nine start, the total purse will total $27,825 with $16,695 of that going to the winning owner of the race which honors Sheeky Greene, Joe Kelman's 1973 Sprinter of the Year.

The Sheeky Greene appears to be a wide-open race with several in the field holding credentials for victory. The Illinois-bred Marluet's Troy received highweight of 123 pounds from racing secretary and handicapper Tinker Lane but the five-year-old's task will not be an easy one.

A multiple stakes winner last year, Marluet's Troy has been to the post only twice this season. The first was in the Midwest Handicap at Hawthorne which resulted in an out of the money performance. The Troy Our Boy gelding atoned with an easy victory against state-breds on May 20.

Trainer Jere Smith will start the entry of Italian Connection and Bill Bonbright. The former is expected to contest the speed issue with Marluet's Troy while his stablemate should be running off the pace.

The complete field by post position follows: Gaines, Houlahan, and Sangster's Solitary Hall, 112, Tommy Wall is named to ride; William Welland's Marluet's Troy who had no rider named; Mitchell, Robert and Smith's Bill Bonbright, 118, no rider; Donald Peltier's Glassy Dip, 121, Earlie Flores; C.H. Haff's Buddy LaRosa, 115, Eddie Delahoussaye; Elmdorf Farm's Proponent, 118, M.A. Rivera; Daybreak Farm's Galley Ho, 110, Bobby Woodhouse; Adams and Engelland's Mr. Kel, 118, Leslie Ahrens; and W.A. Lofton's Italian Connection, 118, with no rider named.

Hal Sprehe Memorial

by KEITH REINHARD

Phil Czosnyka and Jim McDonald, two outstanding pitchers who last collided in the Mid-Suburban League championship game, have been named as the starters for the Fourth Annual Hal Sprehe Memorial All-Star Baseball Game slated for Fremd High School Sunday at 1 p.m.

Czosnyka, a Buffalo Grove veteran, registered the top ERA in the circuit this past spring, a miserly 0.73, and fanned 40 in less than 28 innings of work during regular season play.

McDonald, Prospect, posted a 1.47 ERA and walked just 14 in 42 innings of regular campaign action. Both he and Czosnyka posted perfect 5-0 won loss records.

THE TWO all-conference hurlers will have their work cut out for them. The North team coached by John Eliasak that McDonald will face has eight batters with 300-plus averages.

Led by designated hitter Dan McSweeney at an even .400, the lineup also includes outfielders Bill Knuth (.393), Scott Groot (.372) and Frank Desimone (.321), catcher Dave Martin (.352) and infielders Mike Ledna (.354), Rick Heredia (.333) and Jim Passolt (.314).

First baseman Tim Prokof, who is also a standout pitcher, rounds out the North opening alignment.

CZOSNYKA'S CHORE will be to square off against a South club coached by Rich Symonds that contains the MSL's top hitter and 1-2 sluggers in 1977.

And in addition to premier batsman Bill Bilsley (.453) and Rob Totten and Larry Dahl with .733 and .731 slugging averages respectively, the South has more firepower in outfielders Scott Schafer, Rick Baker and Mike Frushour, infielders Chris Hanson and Dave Wille and catcher Pat Higgins.

Bilsley plays third, Dahl first and Totten opens in the designated hitter slot.

The North won the first Hal Sprehe game at Prospect in 1974 but the South bounced back with victories at Wheeling in 1975 and Forest View in 1976.

Over 40 players will be honored in the fourth game, representing all 13 schools in the Mid-Suburban League as well as St. Viator.

Best of luck, Slew, from a 'friend'

Dear Seattle Slew:

Hope this letter is finding you in good health, you big ox. You are probably so dumb that you will have to get someone to read this to you out loud. It doesn't matter - by now you're putting your blinders on, you big sis. You're the only horse I know that's terrified of a bag of oats.

Anyway, I just thought I'd write you a note to let you know that I think of you and your so-called attempt at racing's Triple Crown. I think you are a bum. How do you like them apples?

IF YOU WIN at Belmont it'll be the biggest joke since Don Quixote fell off his horse at the starting gate. You're not good enough to carry Sham's harness.

By the way, Slew, I've been meaning to ask you, don't the other horses give you a terrible time with that name of yours? Seattle Slew? What kind of donkey name is that? You're not happy to run in the slop, you've got to roll in it too. They may as well call you Salinas Swamp or Pittsburgh Gluepot.

Byline report

If that name goes up there alongside Citation's and Whirlaway's on Saturday, I'll eat Penny Tweedy's hat.

Slew, I think you stink. I agreed with Arcaro that you didn't prove anything in the Derby. You made the Run for the Roses look like a run for dandelions. If it wasn't for that French midget on your back, you'd still be trying to find the rail.

Stargell's blast saves Pittsburgh

Willie Stargell clouted a two-out, three-run homer in the 11th inning Friday night, giving the Pirates a 10-7 victory over San Diego in a game played under protest by the Padres at Pittsburgh.

Stargell's blast to left-center off reliever Rollie Fingers, 4-2, followed singles by Dave Parker and Al Oliver and gave Rich Gossage his fifth victory in seven decisions.

Ironically, Stargell was the player singled out by Padre manager Alvin Dark when he lodged his protest in the bottom of the first. When Rennie Stennett, the seventh Pirate to approach the plate, came to bat with runners on first and second, Dark contended that his copy of the Pirate lineup card showed Stargell batting in both the No. 5 and 7 positions.

THE PIRATES tied the game in the seventh when Bill Robinson greeted reliever Rollie Fingers with a double, took third when Rennie Stennett singled to deep short and scored when first baseman Mike Ivie fell down while corraling Bill Almon's throw.

The Padres had taken the lead in the seventh on Gene Tenace's second homer of the game, a two-run shot over the left field fence off reliever Terry Forster. Tenace also homered in the fifth, a solo drive into the left field seats, and singled in a run in the third.

In Houston, Joaquin Andujar allowed only two hits — both by John Stearns — to win his fifth straight game and pitch the Houston Astros to a 4-1 victory over the New York Mets.

Houston's first run came in the third inning off starter and loser Jon Matlack, 3-7, when Cesar Cedeño was hit by a pitch, took third on a wild pickoff attempt and scored on Enos Cabell's sacrifice fly.

The Astros, who broke a four-game losing streak, added two runs in the fourth on a walk to Bob Watson, a double by Cliff Johnson, a single by Art Howe and a fielder's choice.

The Astros completed their scoring in the seventh when Andujar singled, was sacrificed to second and scored on Felix Millan's throwing error.

MIKE SCHMIDT smashed two home runs and drove in five runs to power the Philadelphia Phillies to a 7-5 victory over the Atlanta Braves in Atlanta.

Schmidt hit a solo homer in the first inning, singled home a run in the fourth and cracked a three-run homer in the seventh off losing reliever Dave Campbell to erase a 5-4 Atlanta lead.

Willie Montanez hit a two-run homer for Atlanta in the first inning and also doubled home a pair of runs in the fourth to put Atlanta ahead 5-3.

Ron Reed, 5-2, picked up the win with two perfect innings in relief.

GEORGE FORTER, Cesar Geronimo and Danny Driessen slammed home runs to spark a 16-hit attack that carried the Cincinnati Reds to a 13-1 rout of the Montreal Expos in Cincinnati.

Fred Norman, picking up his fifth straight victory and his sixth of the season against two losses, combined with Pedro Borbon to restrict the Expos to five hits.

PINCH-HITTER Roger Freed lined a two-out single to center in the 12th inning to score Keith Hernandez from second base and give the St. Louis Cardinals an 8-7 triumph over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Tony Scott started the 12th inning rally with a single and stole second before Ted Simmons was issued an intentional walk by loser Stan Wall, 1-2. Hernandez walked to load the bases, and after Joel Youngblood bounced into a double play, Freed smacked his game-winning single.

Yankees help Sox, whip Minnesota

From Herald Wire Services

Willie Randolph's two-run double and Chris Chambliss' run-scoring single and steal of home Friday night paced the Yankees to a 4-1 triumph over the Minnesota Twins in a battle of AL division leaders at New York.

The defeat allowed the White Sox, who lost earlier in the evening, to stay two games behind the Twins in the American League West while the Yankees picked up a half game on the Boston Red Sox in the East.

Trailing 1-0 with two outs in the fourth inning, Fran Healy and Bucky Dent singled and Randolph followed with a double to left-center to score both runners.

CHAMBLISS singled home Reggie Jackson, who had doubled, in the fifth and moved to third on a double by Lou Piniella that knocked out starter Geoff Zahn.

With pinch-hitter Roy White at bat, Chambliss broke for home and made it easily when reliever Ron Schueler's low pitch bounced out of catcher

AL baseball

Butch Wynegar's glove in front of the plate.

Ron Guidry went 8-1/3 innings to gain his fourth victory in six decisions with Sparky Lyle getting the final two outs to notch his 12th save. Minnesota scored its run in the first when Lyman Bostock led off with a single, stole second and scored on Rod Carew's single.

In Milwaukee, Cecil Cooper stroked an 0-2 pitch for an opposite field double in the seventh inning to score Jim Wohlford with the run that gave the Milwaukee Brewers a 4-3 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

THE SCORE WAS tied 3-3 when Wohlford opened the seventh with a double to left. Larry Haney's sacrifice bunt moved him to third and, after Robin Yount struck out and Don Money was walked intentionally, Cooper dropped a double down the third base line.

Jim Slaton, who had lost to the Royals six straight times, went seven innings for Milwaukee and received credit for his fourth triumph in 10 decisions. It was only his second career victory over the Royals in 10 decisions.

Milwaukee scored single runs in the second on Sixto Lezcano's 11th homer, in the fourth on Von Joshua's RBI single and in the sixth on singles by Cooper and Lezcano and Sal Bando's infield out. Kansas City scored its runs in the third on a run-scoring double by Tom Poquette, a throwing error by Slaton during a rundown at third base and George Brett's RBI single.

IN BOSTON, a drenching, day-long rain forced cancellation of Friday's baseball game between the Texas Rangers and the Boston Red Sox.

The contest was to be made up today as part of a day-night doubleheader, with separate admissions.

The Red Sox waited until 7:30 p.m. to call the game, which had been scheduled for 6:35.

Three games were played on the West Coast. Toronto played at Seattle, Detroit at Oakland and Cleveland at California.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS' Jerry DeSimone, who starred last summer for the Arlington American Legion team, is out at second base Friday as Temple's Pete Dempsey relays throw in College World Series. Southern rolled in its opener, 10-5.

McKeon loses post in Finley's shuffle

OAKLAND, Calif. — Owner Charles O. Finley, still confident the young Oakland A's can win the American League pennant this year, fired Jack McKeon Friday and hired highly successful collegiate coach Bobby Winkles to run the team through the 1978 season.

Winkles, a coach with the Giants across the bay in San Francisco, was first contacted by Finley two weeks ago and hired Thursday night after a two-hour meeting in Chicago.

"We talked about the possibility of this happening the past few days and Charlie thinks the team has a chance to win this year and felt it was time for a change," Winkles told newsmen at a press conference. "This team has a lot of young guys, and I like that. A few veterans on the squad gives it a good mixture of young and old."

Winkles was a highly successful coach at Arizona State University, where he won NCAA titles in 1965, 1967 and 1969.

Al Geiberger sets record with 59

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Al Geiberger set a PGA record with a 13-under-par 59 Friday to take a seven-stroke lead at the end of the second round of the Memphis Golf Classic.

The 17-year tour veteran had 11 birdies and one eagle in his round, which beat by one stroke the PGA 18-hole record of 60 held by six men.

The astonishing performance gave Geiberger, who started the day at even par, a 36-hole total of 131, 13 below par, and put him seven strokes ahead of Gary Player and Ray Floyd.

Geiberger began his round on the back nine and opened with a birdie on No. 10. He parred 11, birdied 12, then parred 13 and 14. Then on No. 15 he began a streak of seven holes under par. He birdied the 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th before making the turn.

On the par-5 first hole, Geiberger reached the green in two and sank a 30-foot putt for an eagle. He then birdied the second and the third holes before ending his streak with par on the fourth.

Kings surprise by picking Jenner

LOS ANGELES — Bruce Jenner, the 1976 Olympic record-setting decathlon champion, was taken completely by surprise Friday when he was told that he was selected by the Kansas City Kings in the seventh round of the pro basketball draft.

He questioned whether the Kings were serious in picking him since he hasn't played basketball since his college days seven years ago and said his chances of playing pro ball were "very remote."

Jenner was the most valuable player on the Newton, Conn., high school basketball team and was a 6-1 forward at Graceland College in Iowa as a sophomore in 1970.

Jazz surprise by picking a woman

NEW ORLEANS — The New Orleans Jazz, who once drafted a Russian Olympian, Friday became the second NBA team to draft a woman with the seventh round pick of Lusia Harris, a 6-3 star from Delta State in Mississippi.

Harris led the Lady Statesmen to three consecutive national titles and was on the bronze medal U.S. Olympic team at Montreal.

Jazz General Manager Lewis Schaffel said she would be offered a chance to participate in rookie camp.

"Whether she makes this team, that's (coach) Elgin Baylor's decision," Schaffel said. "She's got the body for it — and I don't mean that facetiously."

Southern Illinois wins in Series

OMAHA — Southern Illinois slugged 15 hits for a 10-5 win over Temple in the opening game of the 31st College World Series at Rosenblatt Stadium, ending the Owls' winning streak at 17 games.

Craig Robinson and Chuck Curry paced Southern Illinois with home runs. Robinson's was an inside-the-park 400-foot shot off the center field wall and Curry's was a 370-foot blast over the right field wall.

Southern Illinois (30-10) was scheduled to advance to the second round Sunday and Temple (34-8) to meet the loser of the Arizona State-Clemson match Saturday.

Sports people

Olympic champion Arnie Robinson leaped 27 feet 1/4 inch on his final attempt Friday to beat Nigerian Charlton Ekhuzelen and win his third straight National AAU long jump title . . . Ekhuzelen, who attends the University of Illinois, was the runnerup with 26-8 1/2 in competition in Los Angeles . . . Marty Liquori won the 5,000 meter run in 15:41.6.

Californian Lee Miles of Arizona State fired a three-under-par 69 Friday for a two-stroke lead in the 80th NCAA Golf Championships at Colgate University's Seven Oaks Golf Course in Hamilton, N.Y.

Sting fall in overtime to Minnesota

by KEITH REINHARD

First place will have to wait a little longer for the Chicago Sting.

Leaning heavily on their strong defensive line, the Sting battled Minnesota to a scoreless regulation deadlock for the second time this season only to fall in overtime 1-0 on a corner kick at Soldier Field Friday night.

It was the second loss in a row for Chicago, and they have now gone through two full contests without denting the enemy nets. Despite their 4-8 record going into Friday's contest, however, the Sting would have moved into first place in the evenly balanced Northern Division with a win over the Kicks.

"WE LOST the game in midfield," said Chicago coach Bill Foulkes, obviously disappointed over his club's opportunity to sweep the home-and-home series with an outfit he considers the best in the league.

"Our defense was in command the whole game," Foulkes continued, "but we just couldn't get anything going out front. We had opportunities. We just didn't take advantage of them."

Chicago was obviously missing the offensive services of injured Jim McCallum and Paul Pringle and slumping Jim Kelly, but ironically Pringle and Kelly were both in the lineup when overtime play began.

HALFWAY THROUGH the first extra session, Chicago broke up a Minnesota threat and the visitors were awarded a corner kick at the 3:41 mark.

Alan West launched a low, short shot toward the middle that just happened to catch center back Steve Litt, dashing diagonally toward the net.

Litt didn't even have to break stride while knocking in his second goal of the season.

A crowd of 4,528 saw the two teams play even soccer through the first half, but the powerful Kick frontline outshot the Sting 10-1 in the second half, and it was only through the efforts of a hard-working defense improved by the addition of world-class English center forward Dave Roberts that the Sting was able to keep the guests off the scoreboard.

FOULKES FEELS his club has been through the toughest half of its schedule and is still a contender. Trailing Toronto (4-7) and St. Louis (4-8) at this point, the Sting will face another home game Wednesday against Seattle.

Versatile bluegill most popular fish

And then there's the bluegill.

Overlooked, maligned and just plain forgotten, the bluegill is as much a part of Illinois' game fish diet as the coho salmon or Lake Michigan perch.

In fact, a survey conducted by the National Wildlife Federation indicated that the bluegill is the most popular fish in the nation.

The gill is abundant, predictable and ounce for ounce, as much a battler as bass or trout. He's found in virtually every freshwater pond or lake.

Jim Cook

Outdoor editor

THE BLUEGILL'S omnipresence is testimony of its persistence and stamina where other species have failed. Drought and winter kill are only interruptions in the gill's prolific propagation.

Whether stalked with fly rod, ultralight outfit or bamboo pole, bluegills are ferocious feeders that can make the reel drag sing and even the stiffest rod tips plunge.

But perhaps even more important than its sport fishing enjoyment is its food value. Bluegills are fleshy, white fish that when prepared properly, rival the deliciousness of walleye pike and perch.

When the muskie goes into summer hibernation, Mr. Largemouth heads for deep water and the walleye is more intent on building castles on a sand bar than striking a lure, there's always the irrepressible bluegill.

THE WILY entertainer gets its name from an aqua streak on the gill flap that is highly visible when the fish darts through the water after being hooked. In other parts of the nation, he's known as sunny, shellcracker, sunfish, perch, pond perch, bream and brim.

Particularly in the south where the growing season is longer, bluegills reach "slab" size of a pound or better in relatively short time.

They start by eating tiny microscopic plants and animals and progress to indiscriminate attacks on earthworms, grasshoppers, moths, grubs, houseflies, spiders, trout flies, spinners, mealworms and even frozen or canned shrimp.

Topping the bluegill's list of delicacies, though, seems to be the redworm, which when dangled precariously from a small hook, is usually irresistible to the "pygmy powerhouse."

ALBAMA BOASTS the world record bluegill — a monstrous 4-pound, 12-ounce male caught in Ketona Lake in 1960. Illinois' top bluegill weighed in at 2-pounds, 10-ounces.

The bluegill fishing attraction is its simplicity. A rod, reel, split shot weight, hook and a can of worms is really all that is required to play tug-of-war with the "bulldog with fins."

Angling is best when the bluegills are on their spawning beds during early summer. The fish are in shallow water and hungry.

Overpopulation and resultant stunting are problems posed by the thriving bluegill. The rate of reproduction coupled with its voracious feeding habits make the bluegill a serious management concern.

BLUEGILLS CAN dominate a small farm pond, wiping out an entire food supply and starving other game fish populations such as bass. As their numbers increase, space and nourishment decrease and the result is stunted bluegills that maintain a miniature status, rarely growing past "keeper" length.

When this situation develops, fishery biologists suggest killing off the entire pond and starting from scratch with a restocking program. It's virtually impossible to fish out a lake or pond and devoid it of a bluegill population.

America's most popular fish will always battle back.

WORM WATCHING. Bluegills are paties for a big glob of redworms on a small hook with a split shot weight. Not only fun to catch, bluegills are good eating.

Fishing slow for summer vacation

School's out and more fishermen and women will be on the prowl for their favorite species — be it musky or carp. Here's the outlook both in Illinois and Wisconsin.

Fishing has slowed on Lake Michigan with the best reports coming from Evanston northward to Zion. Most salmon and trout are hitting trolled flies and spoons.

Coho are averaging 25 inches in length and although coho fishing is rated "good," anglers are working hard to get limits. Steelhead fishing is fair, while chinook and lake trout catches are sporadic.

SHORELINE ANGLERS are picking up a few nice fish immediately after storms. Most fish are being taken in the top 25 feet of water.

Channel catfish are rated spotty on Grass Lake in the Chain O'Lakes. Most success is reported by trotliners using cut bait and nitecrawlers. Best sets are near the edge of cattails.

At the McHenry Dam on the Fox River from Antioch to McHenry, anglers are taking channel cat below the dam and in river beds. Crappie are averaging 8-inches below the dam.

At Moraine Hills State Park in McHenry, all species except bass are taking worms. Bass are being taken with jigs with both boat and bank fishermen reporting success.

IN THE SOUTHEAST portion of Wisconsin, northern pike are hitting well on most inland waters. A few walleyes are being taken on Tichigan and Wind lakes in Racine county, Upper and Lower Nemadhin lakes in Waukesha county and on Pike Lake in Washington county. Bluegills and crappies are biting well on most lakes.

In the southern section, Smallmouth bass are providing some activity in the Wisconsin River and crappies are hitting on Lake Redstone.

About 60,000 coho died in transit in April. Then during May only 100,000 coho were delivered due to the need for huge amounts of ice. Finally the company just gave up for the rest of this season, Wight said.

THE STATE'S contract for $89,000 was to cover successful shipment and stocking of 200,000 coho and 125,000 chinook. The other 100,000 coho were to be paid for by Salmon Unlimited, the sportfishing organization dedicated to salmon and trout fishing.

The Department of Conservation had been leaning heavily upon purchase of fish from the private hatchery to make this the largest stocking year ever with about 1,017,000 fish stocked.

Decreasing availability of fish from such former sources as the state of Michigan and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had forced the state to

Salmon stocking below projections

Early hot weather that has blessed Chicago area fishermen could curse them as well by preventing the stocking of record numbers of salmon and lake trout in Lake Michigan by the Illinois Dept. of Conservation (IDC).

Mark Trail's OUTDOOR TIPS

WHEN YOU STORE YOUR OUTBOARD MOTOR BETWEEN FISHING TRIPS, IT IS BEST NOT TO PUT A TIGHT COVER OVER IT AS CONDENSATION COULD CAUSE DAMAGE...

DRAP A TARP OR COVER OVER IT LOOSELY TO KEEP OUT DUST

The hot weather has caused a private hatchery, Domsea Farms, of Bremerton, Wash., to back out of contracts with the state and with Salmon Unlimited to stock 300,000 coho and 125,000 chinook salmon in Lake Michigan, IDC fishery biologist Harry Wight said.

THE STATE'S contract for $89,000 was to cover successful shipment and stocking of 200,000 coho and 125,000 chinook. The other 100,000 coho were to be paid for by Salmon Unlimited, the sportfishing organization dedicated to salmon and trout fishing.

The Department of Conservation had been leaning heavily upon purchase of fish from the private hatchery to make this the largest stocking year ever with about 1,017,000 fish stocked.

Decreasing availability of fish from such former sources as the state of Michigan and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had forced the state to look for private sources until the state's own hatchery facilities can be expanded, Wight said.

The loss of the chinook may be partially compensated for by purchasing 100,000 of that species from a private hatchery in Minnesota, according to Larry Dunham, special projects staff biologist for the IDC.

A LESSER BLOW to the stocking program is word that 20,000 brown trout probably would not be available through the federal government, Dunham added. Supplies of 177,000 lake trout and 120,000 rainbow trout from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service were still believed unaffected, he said.

The possibility of Salmon Unlimited using some of its unspent coho money on reinforcing the stocks of brown and rainbow trout is being discussed with that organization, Dunham said.

"The loss of the 200,000 coho was particularly upsetting," Wight said, "because coho is generally a more catchable fish than the chinook. Coho haven't been stocked in great numbers in Illinois waters in the past because of lack of availability of the fish and because Illinois' present hatchery system is ill-equipped to raise the young coho."

"Again, it points up the need for our own facilities in our own state," Michael Conlin, chief of the IDC's fishery division said of the stocking difficulties.

Delay mowing of roadsides

The Department of Conservation is requesting that rural landowners delay roadside mowing until at least mid-July to provide adequate time for small animals and birds to build nests and raise families along rural roads.

Species that commonly use roadsides for nesting are pheasant, quail, rabbits and songbirds.

"Many species of ground nesting birds and small mammals already are busy building nests in preparation for raising families," said Jack Ellis, supervisor of the Division of Wildlife Resources.

"THE CRITICAL period is from mid-June to mid-July, when approximately 70 per cent of these roadside nesting species will be incubating eggs and raising broods."

Studies have shown that more than just nests are destroyed by early mowing. In one study area, 20 per cent of the hen pheasants were destroyed by mowing when the birds chose to remain on nests with eggs almost ready to hatch.

Where noxious weeds are especially abundant, the Department is urging that landowners use only spot mowing or spot spraying to alleviate the problem.

Ellis pointed out that seeding of roadsides with the proper grasses can halt noxious weed growth and entirely eliminate the need for mowing. He urged landowners to investigate the Department's "Roadsides for Wildlife" program.

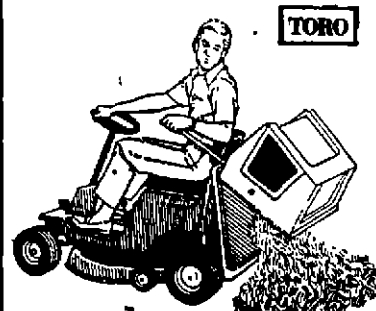

Information is available by writing: Department of Conservation, Division of Wildlife Resources, 605 State Office Bldg., Springfield, Ill. 62706.

Are microprocessors next boom field?

by LEA TONKIN

Microprocessors are the size of a poker chip. But the gadgets are the heart of small computers used to control automotive systems and keep small business mailing lists up-to-date.

When not being used as a handy tool in business, the mini-computers, controlled by microprocessors, will simulate outer space war games or plan the family budget.

The microprocessor is much more than sophisticated electronic circuitry etched on a tiny chip. The people who manufacture, sell and use these miniature brains say microprocessors will have a dramatic impact on business routine and lifestyles.

One devotee who predicts the microprocessor market "is really going to take off" is Jerome Wolf, a Riverwoods accountant. He's come up with a myriad of business and home applications for the microcomputer, as a veteran owner of four months.

WOLF PURCHASED the system as a kit for $1,500, after a two and a half year search which had previously dead-ended at $25,000 minicomputers. Now that he has learned basic computer language and the means to write his own computer programs, Wolf says "anybody with average intelligence" can do the same.

With a few lessons in programming,

Wolf says, microcomputer buyers in business for themselves can concoct a seemingly endless number of time-saving chores for the electronic gizmos. Manufacturing production forecasts, calculation of overhead and profit projections, keeping track of business expenses and a perpetual inventory system are among his suggestions.

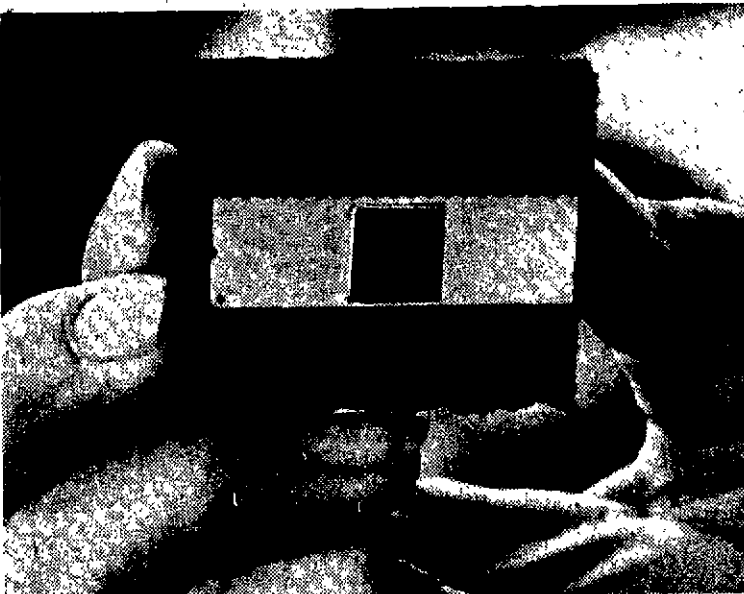

Wolf, who also runs a television production company, says some microcomputer systems can be used to "clean up" unedited copy. Small business owners could use the systems to update mailing lists and prepare form letters, he said.

In his own home, Wolf uses a microcomputer to keep an inventory of his music recordings, log telephone calls and keep the family budget.

Instant access to recipes and records of investment earnings are other personal uses for the systems, Wolf said.

The company Wolf discovered as a supplier for microcomputer gear is American Microprocessors Equipment & Supply Corp., 20 N. Milwaukee Ave., Prairie View. Owner Ed Cooper says Wolf is among the first wave of customers in the fledgling industry. Consumers and small business owners eventually will think of microprocessors as a basic accessory for economic and entertainment purposes, he predicts.

SEVERAL CATEGORIES of microprocessor customers are identified by Cooper. "First, there are the tinkers," he said. "They may have been involved in ham radio, or hobbies such as radio controlled airplanes.

Hobbyists may buy their gear to coordinate with other systems — for example, a ham radio operator hooking a unit up with accessory equipment to record any calls coming in during his absence.

"Then there is the home market, for people who like to have the latest in entertainment ideas for their home," Cooper said. Computerized games, biorhythm charts, dieting plans and budgeting programs have sparked consumer interest.

Small business and educational markets also are served by microprocessor technology. Cooper estimates that a microcomputer with an accessory printer and other gear might take care of payroll and a variety of bookkeeping tasks.

Do-it-yourselfers can buy a basic kit and assemble it themselves, Cooper said. For the hobbyist, an unas-sembled kit sold by Cooper starts at approximately $850.

"YOU DON'T HAVE to be an electronic wizard to run one of these," Cooper says of his Keep It Super Simple (KISS) computer systems. Like other microprocessor retailers, however, he advises customers to do their homework before making a purchase.

Price, capability and speed should be suited to a buyer's needs, says Keith Cook, co-owner of the Computer Land franchise store slated to open this month at 50 E. Rand Road, Arlington Heights. He advises potential microcomputer customers to read available magazines and books, and to make sure they understand exactly what they want the computer to do.

Starting out with a simple system is a good idea for many customers, but the serious hobbyist and the business user should know which extras can be added. Printers, information storage systems, editors and other gear may be needed.

COOK'S PARTNER, John Gibbs, is predicting a bright future for the microcomputer industry, despite an initial education gap between the layman and the computer specialist.

Once customers learn to use the systems, they can buy or develop their own programs for business and entertainment, he said. Outer space war games, tic-tac-toe and other programs are already on the market.

Kennedy asks delay on saccharin ban

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., Friday proposed an 18-month delay on the planned saccharin ban, but said diet pop and other saccharin products should be removed from vending machines. Kennedy also said all saccharin products should be accompanied by a warning similar to that on cigarette packages and no television or radio advertising of saccharin products should be allowed.

Kennedy is considered the top health expert in the Senate and a similar delay was proposed last week by Rep. Paul Rogers, D-Fla., top health expert in the House.

FDA delays ice cream ruling

A federal standard critics claim would produce lower quality ice cream will not go into effect Monday as originally scheduled, a Food and Drug Administration official said Friday. The official said the standard will be delayed until FDA Commissioner Donald Kennedy makes a decision on requests — including one from Agriculture Sec. Bob Bergland — for public hearings. Under the proposal, the FDA would eliminate a longstanding requirement that all ice cream must contain 10 per cent nonfat milk solids. Instead, only 2.7 per cent protein content would be required, allowing use of a cheap imported dairy byproduct, caseinate.

ITT files antitrust lawsuit

International Telephone & Telegraph filed suit Friday in U.S. district court against American Telephone & Telegraph, Western Electric Co. and Bell Laboratories Inc., alleging the three companies combined to prevent ITT from selling telephone equipment to ATT. ITT charged the three companies violated the Sherman and Clayton antitrust acts by adopting a deliberate policy of refusing to buy telephone equipment from other suppliers even when it had been proven technically equal, if not superior, and cheaper than equipment provided by Bell.

House OKs Israel boycott ban

The House Friday gave final Congressional approval to a bill banning U.S. businesses from participating in the Arab boycott of Israel and empowering Congress to veto exports of Alaskan oil to Japan. The measure, passed on a 306-41 vote and sent to President Carter, was a compromise worked out between the House and Senate to extend the Export Administration Act through Sept. 30, 1979, with a $14 million authorization.

Panel to monitor interest rates

The Council on Wage and Price Stability said Friday it will begin to monitor on a regular basis the interest rates charged by the nation's commercial banks. Rep. Henry Reuss, D-Wis., chairman of the House banking committee, requested the council to study lending policies of banks to determine their impact on inflation.

Exec gets $60,000 in S&H suit

A New Jersey business executive has won $60,000 plus legal fees to settle his claims of racial discrimination against the company that issues S&H green stamps. The settlement, announced Thursday by the state division of human rights, was described by officials as the largest such case in their memory. The settlement stemmed from a complaint by William Perkins, of Glen Rock, N.J., against his employer, the S&H trading stamps division of the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. of New York.

U.S. told foreign aid not enough

NEW YORK — Sometimes it seems as if the American people's attitude has changed, after two centuries, from "Don't tread on me" to "Please kick."

The latest evidence of our strange bent for masochism surfaced the other day in Paris, when we suffered through another round of abuse at an international economic conference on aid to "developing" nations.

Apparently nobody found it insulting that the 19 so-called Third World nations attending unanimously condemned the United States and seven other Western nations for not having made our checks larger.

THIS COUNTRY, whose world wide assistance to others in the last generation is without precedent in human history, was flayed unmercifully — just as we have been at every similar conference since the earth's least successful peoples discovered they were a "bloc." (In 1964, when I was in Cairo for the major summit meeting of "nonaligned" nations, it was clear that their only true common policy consisted of loud — and generally unanswered — attacks on the United States.)

Nor is there any less hypocrisy today. Consider the effrontery of Venezuela's minister for international economic relations, who denounced Western offers by U. S. Sec. of State Cyrus Vance and his colleagues as "not commensurate with the magnitude of the great problems which the developing countries face" and "far below our expectations."

This, mind you, from the representative of a nation that is itself an enthusiastic participating member of the OPEC oil cartel — the group whose arrogant selfishness and abusive use of economic power have damaged standards of living all over the world, notably including those in the poorest nations.

FOR US TO listen docilely to this kind of empty demagoguery is to encourage its continuance, and to discourage the searching self-appraisals that might truly bring economic progress to these countries.

A more sensible U. S. policy toward the "developing" nations — in their interest as well as ours — would emphasize these four points:

There really is no "Third World." Nations vary greatly, both in what is considered the industrialized West and in what is considered the underdeveloped world. The latter includes a range from oil-rich sheikdoms to the poverty-stricken marshes of Bangladesh.

Just as resources and problems may differ tremendously from country to country, so do the techniques for dealing with them. Economic success or failure is not always preordained by accidents of birth, either for nations or for individuals.

We can help less successful nations, but we cannot do the job for them. The simplistic notion, popular at gatherings such as that in Paris, is that the problems of poorer countries would be solved if only nations like ours handed over a higher percentage of our gross national product. Two things are certain: It wouldn't work, and the percentage would never be high enough to satisfy the theorists of redistribution.

I lived for more than two years in India, a country that, in terms of strictly economic aid, has been the most consistent drain on the American purse. Sadly, I am convinced that the Indian people would be better off today if we had withheld nearly all those billions of dollars. Too much went to the wrong places — to proping up a corrupt bureaucracy and to financing losing experiments in socialism. We were good of heart, but weak of head.

The fast-fading colonial experience cannot be the perennial excuse for economic failure.

Not only is the United States relatively guiltless in this regard, but in fact the economic infrastructure left by the colonial powers remains a key asset in many "developing" countries. Even more to the point, alibis for continuous failure — however valid — are no substitute for diligently pursuing progress.

We have no intention of pushing other nations around — but we do have some knowledge, from our own experience, of what does and does not work in economics (both in Toledo and in Taiwan), and we are going to concentrate our future help on those who show good sense in making use of it.

Devoted though many Americans are to wallowing in their own supposed guilt, we will do better for others by asserting a little more respect for ourselves.

"My account executive gave me something special — a rotten cold!"

Bloom off economic recovery?

WASHINGTON — The economic outlook in the United States is reasonably strong for the months ahead. Alone among major industrial nations, the United States is likely to achieve its official forecast for economic growth, something on the order of 6 per cent.

Nonetheless, there are some doubts cropping up in Washington, mostly about the course of inflation, but relating also to the possibility that the bloom is off the recovery. The consensus among government officials (who won't talk about it for the record) and private analysts (who will) seems to be that consumer spending — the main element in the recovery — is tapering off.

As a rough rule of thumb, if unexpectedly perky consumer buying helped push the gross national product up by about 7 per cent in real terms in the first half of the year, a 5 per cent increase in the second half might be the real prospect. In the view here, and outside the government, that's not great, but it's not a disaster either.

THE REAL WORRY IS INFLATION. President Carter a few weeks ago set as a goal the reduction of what he called the "underlying" 6 per cent rate of inflation to 4 per cent by the end of 1979.

But given what has been going on, that looks like an impossible goal. First of all, this business of the "underlying" rate is deceptive. It excludes major increases in food and fuel, which are relatively uncontrollable by government action.

But the consumer doesn't pay something called the "underlying rate." He or she pays what sellers charge. And the fact is that in April, and during the past three months, the cost of living has been going up approximately at an annual rate of 10 per cent. So there is no real relief in sight.

Unless we want to kid ourselves by semantical references to an "underlying" or "basic" rate, we again have succumbed to double-digit inflation.

FEAR OF INFLATION, and continued uncertainty over the direction of Carter administration policies, including the energy program, help explain the sagging stock market. It seems perfectly clear to Wall Street that inflation is on the rise, and that means tight money and higher interest rates.

"Nothing seems to work," says an economist in close touch with financial analysts. "The economy hasn't been allowed to move forward too fast, but it hasn't done a damn thing for the inflation index."

Initially, President Carter estimated that the budget deficit this year would be $68 billion. That has been whittled back to $48.7 billion, and Carter's budget experts privately admit that a new spending "short-fall" this time in the stimulus program, will reduce the deficit to $45 billion.

That would mean a $23 billion swing in the direction of "fiscal integrity" — and prices are still on their way up. This casts doubt on the President's ill-advised effort last week to link budget deficits and inflation.

BARRY BOSWORTH, an expert on wage-price-inflation matters who has been working for the Council of Economic Advisers, provided a rare, realistic insight on inflation last week at the Economists Club here.

Speaking in his private capacity, Bosworth said that since neither business nor labor is willing for the government to intervene in the private decision-making process, "prices are headed no place but up, and the rate of inflation will accelerate over the next couple of years."

"The real problem," said Bosworth, "is that fiscal and monetary policies don't work (to control inflation), and nobody is willing to accept alternative methods for decelerating inflation."

When the Carter administration early in the game floated some proposals to moderate wage and price increases, Bosworth observed, "It became clear that neither business nor labor was willing to trust the government. They said they tried it before — in 1973 — and having been screwed once before, they were not willing to do it again." So Carter dropped the effort.

WHAT THIS MEANS is that we are locked into a pattern in which wages rise about 8 per cent annually; and with productivity gaining about 2 per cent, prices go up at the "basic rate" of 6 per cent. Then you tack on whatever is added by food and fuel increases.

Dow Jones up 0.94 points in active trading

NEW YORK (UPI) — The stock market, finding little in the news background, closed out a lackluster week Friday with a small gain in moderately active trading of New York Stock Exchange issues.

The Dow Jones industrial average, down more than two points in the morning, managed to gain 0.94 point to 1010.79. The closely watched average, a 3.14-point loser Thursday, fell 1.44 over-all for the week.

There was little in the news background to influence the market in either direction. President Carter, who plans to hold a news conference Monday, blasted the way congressional committees have ripped apart his energy program.

The NYSE common stock index gained 0.18 to 53.80 and the average price of a common share rose 11 cents.

Advances topped declines, 814 to 554, among the 1,857 issues crossing the composite tape.

Big Board volume totaled 20,490,000 shares, up from the 19,940,000 traded Thursday.

"We have trapped ourselves in a situation where labor justifies the rise of wages by the preceding rise of prices, and business justifies the rise of prices by the preceding rise of labor costs," observed economist Edward M. Bernstein in a recent commencement address at the University of North Carolina.

It is a Catch 22 dilemma. But I suspect that the public, fed up with the inflation merry-go-round, would accept bolder innovations than the timorous leadership at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue is willing to try. (c) 1977, The Washington Post Co.

MICROPROCESSOR systems can be used for everything from business inventory control to family budgeting, says Ed Cooper of American Microprocessor Equipment & Supply Corp. in Prairie View. He calls this system KISS (Keep It Super Simple).

Microprocessors the next boom field?

unassembled units ($950 assembled). As in the pocket calculator industry, new technology is bringing down the cost for components, however.

The California-based Computer Land franchise will probably open 6 outlets in the Chicago metropolitan area, Cook said. He's estimating that first-year sales at the Arlington Heights store will reach $500,000.

One Chicago-area retailer who's got a leg up on the microcomputer market is the Itty Bitty Machine Co. When the first store opened at 1316 Chicago Ave., Evanston, in early 1976, monthly sales ranged from between $5,000 and $8,000, said vice president Judith Odom. For the past month, sales topped $20,000 and a second store was opened in Lombard.

One of the problems in this fledgling industry is that orders for business and hobby systems can outstrip available supply, Ms. Odom said. This is because manufacturers are new and under-capitalized, Ms. Odom said. She adds that hefty sales may draw heavy competition among manufacturers, with an eventual shakeout patterned after the calculator market boom.

MS. ODOM FIGURES that a small business executive with annual sales of less than $5 million might benefit from microprocessors. Past a certain point, so many peripherals and memory storage units would have to be added to the systems that the next step up — to the $20,000-plus mini-computer market — should be made, Ms. Odom said.

The difference between mini-computers and microcomputers is somewhat hazy. Ms. Odom said price, speed and capability distinguish the two. She adds that there are large corporations which might benefit from the use of 10 microprocessors rather than one larger computer. The cost benefits must be weighed on a case-by-case basis, she said.

"In this area, 80 per cent of our time is spent with hobbyists. But 70 per cent of our sales are from industry," Ms. Odom said. Hobbyists use computer systems for everything from turning on house lights and coffee makers to soil analysis, she said.

IT'S DIFFICULT to peg accurate sales figures in an industry that's only about two years old. Some world sales estimates run as high as $300 million for 1977 microprocessor systems and a projected $200 million for microprocessor components alone during 1978.

Three major markets are targets for microprocessor manufacturer such as Schaumburg-based Motorola, Inc., according to spokesman Chuck Sengstock. Appliances, games and the automotive applications should provide steady growth in the industry, he said.

Within the next several years, computers will likely control everything from automatic transmissions to fuel injection systems in new cars. Already the 1977 Oldsmobile Toronado features a microprocessor controlled electronic spark timing system, Sengstock said. It receives information from engine sensors, analyzes the information, and decides which is the best spark firing position, sending the message to the car's distributor. What it amounts to is a fuel-saving system. The U.S. Dept. of Commerce "U.S. Industrial Outlook for 1977" takes note of the increased industry and consumer interest in microprocessor systems. "As demand grows for microprocessors, more industry entrants are expected with a resulting intensification of price and product competition," the report said.

Consult lawyer about making will

by ROBERT EDWARDS
I would like to make a will and wonder if it can be done without a lawyer. I am listed as a partner in a triplex apartment and wonder about my rights. — Mrs. M.F.
I strongly recommend against drawing a will for yourself without the aid of an attorney. You and your husband should both draw wills, particularly since you appear to be a part owner in the apartment house and own a car in your own name. State laws vary widely on rights of wives in property — all the way from the eight community property states where ev-

— J.J.
Automatic dividend reinvestment plans offer benefits for both the stockholder and the company. As a shareholder you can reinvest dividends in fractional shares without paying commissions, thus keeping your money at work at a compounding yield. Corporations offer the plans as one means of acquiring more equity capital with a minimum of expense. Some plans call for the payment of a small service charge. Other companies pay the charges and permit shareholders to acquire small increments of stock at no cost. Whether owning more shares of a company is desirable or not depends on the company, its operations, and how you perceive its future. If you are pleased with your investment, acquiring more shares periodically makes sense. If the investment has not been a good one, you might prefer to take the dividends and invest them elsewhere. I know of no list of corporations offering automatic dividend reinvestment programs. Utilities are among the most frequent users of the plan. Otherwise, you might contact the large New York and Boston banks for leads, as they handle most of the paper work.
During the past 30 years my wife and I have been accumulating U.S. Savings Bonds. Maturity periods have shortened during these years to effectively increase interest rates on E-bonds. When were dates shortened, and what has been the effect on all Series E bonds? — B.C.

Series E Savings Bonds now mature in five years and earn an average 6 per cent interest over the maturity period. Maturities on older issues of E-bonds have been extended, and interest on matured issues is now 6 per cent. Redemption values were adjusted on all previous issues of E-bonds and Freedom Shares to offer current interest at various times. As a result, old issues of E-bonds are worth several times their original maturity value.

As a follow-up to the brief answer about maintaining an IRA, an employee of a company that offers a pension or profitsharing plan may elect not to participate. In this case the employee is not an "active" participant in the employer-established plan and may continue his own Independent Retirement Account (IRA).

Moneywise

by Robert Edwards
Everything is owned 50-50 by husband and wife to states, principally in the East, where the husband is presumed to own most of a married couple's property. Recent changes in gift and estate tax laws make it imperative that couples review their wills and the ownership of property.
I recently learned of corporations offering shareholders an automatic plan for reinvesting dividends without paying broker commissions. What are the advantages and disadvantages of these plans? Where can I find out which corporations offer such plans?

Stocks make strong gain

by FRANK W. SLUSSER
UPI Business Writer
NEW YORK (UPI) — Although blue chips were out of step, stocks registered a broad but erratic gain this week in moderately active trading as institutions adjusted portfolios prior to the third quarter.
The New York Stock Exchange common stock index rose 0.44 to 53.80 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, containing some over-the-counter issues, gained 0.77 to 98.46.
Advances topped declines, 1,114 to 713, among the 2,111 issues crossing the composite tape.
But the Dow Jones industrial average of 30 selected blue-chip stock slipped 1.44 points to 910.79. The closely watched average had seesawed between 900 and 915 during the past several weeks. It gained 13.40 points last week.
Big Board volume totaled 102,200,000 shares, compared with 75,072,840 during the four-day week last week and 81,312,170 during the same week a year ago.

COMPOSITE VOLUME of NYSE issues traded on all exchanges and over the counter totaled 120,810,280 shares, compared with 75,072,840 last week.
A number of analysts noted that despite a recent interest rate spurt, the Dow Jones utilities average reached its highest level since late 1974. The buying, they said, was one indication institutions were adjusting their portfolios.
Trendsetting Citibank of New York surprised Wall Street Friday when it spurned a chance to raise its prime rate a quarter point to 7 per cent. It changed the formula it uses to determine the rate. The prime has risen a half point to 6 1/2 per cent in the past month.
The higher rates resulted from the Federal Reserve Board's credit tightening to stem a 21.6 per cent surge in the April money supply. The latest figures showed the money supply growth had moderated. The White House had been critical of Fed Chairman Arthur F. Burns' policies.

Val Bisoglio can't settle down: he's the free spirit of "Quincy"

by Vernon Scott

Val Bisoglio, who plays Danny the bartender on the "Quincy" series, doesn't imbibe himself except for some wine now and then, taking great pride in the fact that he is Italian through and through.

Val is 50 years old and unmarried. He took the matrimonial plunge 20 years ago. The union survived a scant two weeks. Today he looks back on the ill-fated marriage and says, "It was a means of breaking up a nice relationship."

A New York native who has earned his living as a salesman, gambler and waiter, Val has been too busy moving around the country to settle down.

Currently he is enamored of a 28-year-old beauty he describes as "half Italian, half Irish" who is expecting his child. Neither Val nor his girlfriend is considering marriage.

"We've been going together a long time now," he explains. "Imagine, becoming a father for the first time at my age. It's a thrill."

The actor lives in a decaying apartment house in Hollywood whose principal claim to fame is that the late Louella Parsons lived there when she was just getting her start."

His apartment consists of one large combination living room — bedroom, a kitchen and bath. It's like a thousand other small apartments except for three eight-foot-high French doors that open onto a balcony.

Val has dragged in some ancient oak furnishings, including a rocking chair with only two legs, and enormous bed, some old lamps and bookshelves. He's plastered some of the walls and torn away some fake beams in hopes of giving the place a homey look some day.

"I'm Italian and I've gotta work with my hands or I'll go crazy," he said.

Val also rents an apartment in New York's Greenwich Village, which he shares with a writer friend. It has two bedrooms.

The role of Danny is a recurring one, requiring Val to work only two or three days of each episode of the NBC-TV series. His calls to work vary. Some days he reports to Universal Studios — a 15-minute drive from the apartment — at 7 a.m. Sometimes his call is for 6 p.m.

He devotes his free time to writing scripts and story lines and trying to put production deals together. In other years he produced shows off-Broadway when he wasn't engaged in acting roles.

Much of his income goes to "The Colonnade Theatre Lab" in New York, an off-Broadway theater in which he serves as actor and producer.

His mother, Virginia, was born in the Piedmont region of Italy and lives in an apartment two doors up the street from Val's digs. She cooks most of Val's meals and also serves as his telephone answering service.

"Mom and Dad were born in the same village over there," Val says. "I can trace my family back 600 years to the same district. Mother fixes a great chicken dish with parsley and garlic.

"She doesn't cook much pasta. We northern Italians in the Po Valley area eat mostly rice. We're from peasant stock. Mother used to pick rice in the fields."

Val is delighted to be playing a comedy role in "Quincy." So is his mother who considers it a disgrace when her son portrays gangsters in movies and television shows.

Val Bisoglio portrays Danny, the bartender, in the NBC series "Quincy" Fridays at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 5.

"When I was a New York gambler I had to mix with those tough guys," he recalls. "God were they tough. Their arms were like iron. Their necks were like iron. Now it's embarrassing for me to play them. I usually refuse."

Val is tall and slender and keeps that way by lifting weights and jogging. Now and then he plays golf on the public course at Griffith Park.

Jaclyn Smith

Would you please print something about Jaclyn Smith?

K.P.

Beautiful, green-eyed Jaclyn Smith (Kelly Garrett on "Charlie's Angels") was born October 26 in Houston, Texas. Beginning her career in the performing arts with ballet lessons at the age of three, she became interested in drama in junior high school and continued studying it at Trinity University in San Antonio. She later tried working in New York, where she once conducted a ballet class for children in the Head Start program.

Opportunities began to open up for her on the West Coast, and she grew in demand as both an actress and a model. She appeared in the films "Bootleggers" and "The Adventurers" as well as the TV shows "McCloud," "Get Christie Love," "The Rookies," and "Switch."

Ms. Smith is single and lives in a Beverly Hills home which she has decorated herself. You can write to her at ABC, 4151 Prospect Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal 90027.

Jackie Stewart

Would a short bio on Jackie Stewart, three-time winner of the World Driving Championship, be asking too much?

E.F.

Not at all. He was born

John Young Stewart in Milton, Dunbartonshire, Scotland on June 11, 1939.

Jackie won his first Grand Prix in Italy at Monza in 1965 and in 1966 won at Monaco. With his triumph at Monaco in 1973, Stewart equalled the record of 25 Grand Prix victories set by Jimmy Clark.

He has also driven Indy-type and Cam-Am cars.

Mick Jagger

Would you print the address of the Rolling Stones?

B.J.

The "greatest rock and roll band in the world" can be reached c/o Rolling Stone Records, 1841 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10023.

Editor's note . . .

Each year the City of Milwaukee opens its arms to the arts and stages a three-day festival that draws artists from across the country and thousands of browsers and buyers from neighboring states. The Milwaukee Lakefront Festival of the Arts is coming up next weekend and it's free fun for those willing to drive an hour and a half north and take advantage of it. Mount Prospect municipal reporter Marsha Bosley traveled to Milwaukee to see what's coming this year and tells about the festival on page 3.

Victory Gardens is a rickety old theater where you sit on mostly card chairs to watch the drama and comedy presented on stage. Currently two plays are running at the Near North Side theater, one of which received two Jeff Awards for the 1975-76 season and is the longest running locally produced play in the history of Chicago. The creative forces behind the plays are Bruce and Brian Hickey, who drew on their experiences growing up in the city and later, a suburb to mold plots and characters. Des Plaines municipal reporter Scott Fosdick, who is also a theater buff and critic, tracked down the brothers to talk with them about their growing success. Page 4.

An art extravaganza

by Marsha S. Bosley

Back in the early '60s, the president of the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. sat in his Milwaukee office wondering what, in the form of gusto, he could give the city besides beer.

Bob Uyhlie, one of the most respected beer magnates in the dairy state, wanted to bring to his community a new dimension in entertainment. And he wanted it to be a free show for the people of Milwaukee.

It was fifteen years ago when Uyhlie, moved by the enchantment of the Lake Michigan shoreline, first met with The Friends of Art, an auxiliary fund-raising group of the Milwaukee Art Center, to co-sponsor a lakefront festival.

This year, the same two organizations are preparing for Milwaukee's 15th annual Lakefront Festival of Arts, promising it will be the biggest and best one yet. And from June 17 through 19, Wisconsin's city on the lake, only 90 miles from Chicago, will be buzzing with activity.

It doesn't quite match the prestigious New Orleans Mardi Gras or Newport Jazz Festival. But Milwaukee's art festival attracts and pleases crowds, offering as much diversity and pizzazz as either of the other more notorious festivals.

The lake is placid and still, almost in anticipation of the gala spectacle. In the wake of a long brutal winter, the grounds are just beginning to turn to springtime shades of green and the boats are slowly dribbling back to town, finding their appropriate places in their harbor slips.

Picnic tables are bare now as only a handful of people, most of them brown-baggers from businesses and shops in the downtown area, can be seen strolling through the parks around midday. And the ducks are not yet swimming and cackling in the lagoon.

The picture is pretty and serene but unconvincing that a mammoth art show will be taking place next week. On the face of it, few will know of the festivities until just hours before they commence when artists from throughout the country begin setting up colorful tents and booths on the lakefront. But on the twentieth floor of the First Wisconsin Building, Milwaukee's largest skyscraper, the hustling and bustling has been going on for months and last-minute details are being sewn up.

Barkin, Herman, Solochek & Paulsen, the largest public relations firm in Wisconsin, is promoting the festival as has been the tradition for the last fourteen years. And Ben Barkin, president of the company, is perhaps more excited about it than anyone.

"There is something about the arts that serves as a common denominator for all people," Barkin said. "People love rubbing shoulders in a friendly atmosphere. People who attend the festival, with the beauty of the lakefront and quality entertainment, get a lift out of it. These things develop a spirit in the community. It makes this community come alive."

Wisconsin natives as well as residents from neighboring states will flock to Milwaukee next weekend to patronize the arts — from glass blowing to modern jazz. More than 150 artists, craftsmen and musicians from twenty-five states will flaunt their talents and peddle their wares. There will be something for everyone and naturally, with Schlitz running half the show, plenty of cool beer will be on hand.

Some will visit the fair grounds for the entertainment or to pick up a new conversation piece to decorate their homes. Others will come simply to picnic. Still more outdoor enthusiasts will partake in the festivities just to be included among the expected crowd of 130,000.

"It cuts across the complete social strata," Barkin said. "The lakefront is beautiful and intriguing. It's a total community project. The people have so much fun."

Few cities today bother to give their residents large-scale art festivals, Barkin said. But he predicts within five years every major American metropolis will be the home of one. "The country is in a real festival trend," he said. "With the energy crisis, people are looking to their parks more for entertainment. And the parks belong to the people."

Not to be confused with Milwaukee's Summerfest, a weeklong music festival held in late June, the Lakefront Festival of Arts offers no carnival rides, no hulla-balloo. It's like browsing through an outdoor museum filled with endless galleries of photographs, oils, sculptures, wood carvings and other Deep December, 1976. A chilly $110-a-month basement apartment on Chicago's North Side. Brian and Bruce Hickey are huddled together on a bed, shivering.

Long into the night they talk, pondering, trying out ideas on each other, recalling their shared past as brothers growing up in Humboldt Park and, later, Itasca. They are writing a play.

There's something out of place in this scene of impoverished brothers struggling to make a mark on the world. A look of confidence brightens their faces, a look that contradicts the bleakness of their surroundings.

This slight cockiness has a cause. Bruce, at 24, three years younger than his brother, has already written a hit play that opened to rave reviews in April 1976, and is still drawing full houses.

It is now June 1977, and Bruce's play "All I Want," is in its fifteenth month. This makes it the longest-running play in Chicago today, and the longest-running locally produced play in the entire history of the city.

"Some Kind of Life," the sequel Bruce and Brian wrote to "All I Want" during December, opened in January. It uses the same cast as "All I Want" and alternates nights at the Victory Gardens Theater, on the Near North Side.

It's a long twenty miles from the suburban split-levels of Itasca to the dank flats of Clark Street. Taking Irving Park Road all the way in to the lake makes it an interesting ride, however. Like the layers of sandstone in an archeological dig, you can see the city get older and more run-down block by block as you pass successive rims of urban sprawl.

Bruce and Brian write about the pressure cooker that feeds the continual suburban expansion. They draw on their own experiences of growing-up in a shabby flat in Humboldt Park, and of their parents' struggle, eventually successful, to escape to the suburbs.

"Our parents went through the same thing as the characters do, trying to claw their way out of the city," Brian said. "We were pretty poor. We spent our formative years in a poor part of Chicago."

"I don't blame anybody for moving to the suburbs," said Bruce. "I wouldn't want to raise a kid where I grew up."

Brian shares Bruce's bad memories of city life, but feels a type of emotional bond is often lost when families head for the suburbs.

"Although they become more affluent, the fabric of their family deteriorates. They forget where they came from," Brian said. "I saw it happen to a lot of families," though not his own, he adds.

Neither play has any trace of the misty nostalgia you expect from autobiographical works.

"All I Want" packs an incredible dramatic punch. The intensity of the dialogue sends the audience reeling back in their seats, gasping for a breath of fresh suburban air. It's beer-for-breakfast realism that hopscoches over the theater-of-the-absurd '60s to the heart-wrenching dramas of Eugene O'Neill, Tennessee Williams and Arthur Miller.

But the cant is pure '70s jive, with an inflection straight out of Uptown "Chuck-a-ga."

"All I Want" starts at an intense emotional pitch and builds — amazingly — to a climax that takes catharsis out of the history books and puts it back on stage where it belongs. The Greeks applauded from their graves when the Jefferson Awards committee gave "All I Want" two awards for the 1975-76 season, one to Michael Merritt for scene design, and a special award to Bruce Hickey.

Bruce shies from making grand proclamations about his plays. Like a Sylvester Stallone of the stage, he discourages against finding heavy messages in "All I Want," and puts an Uptown edge in his voice, as if to say, "Who am I to make brainy statements?"

"I don't want any rhetoric. I don't want it to be didactic. I find that embarrassing," said Bruce. "It has to work first on an emotional level, and then an intellectual level... The ideas are in the subtext."

"The most important function it has to serve is entertainment. If you're just interested in communicating ideas, you should write a book."

Bruce based "All I Want" on the experiences he had as a caseworker in Uptown from 1972 to 1974. At the same time that he was a full-time theater and film student at Columbia College, he was putting-in forty hours a week helping people on welfare fill out forms, as he puts it.

"I'd get up at six and go to this incredible ghetto. I was never getting more than five hours sleep."

Bruce says the family in "All I Want" and "Some Kind of Life" is based on a composite of those he ran into as a caseworker.

"What the audience comes away with is very similar to what I came away with in my two years," he said. "You need a little distance. It's very interesting to watch a family argument from across the hall."

You need a little distance to survive Bruce's play as well. Victory Gardens II is a small theater and its actors do a good deal of shouting in "All I Want." So if you've got a weak heart, sit in the back row — or the lobby.

Bruce uses the same defense Alfred Hitchcock used when accused of making violent films.

"I never show any violence on stage. There's always the anticipation of violence, but it never really happens. I don't want to intimidate people."

Despite the success of "All I Want," Bruce couldn't afford to move out of his poorly-heated basement apartment, and December found him sharing his bed with his brother Brian, and trying, of all things, to write a sequel to "All I Want."

Brian laughs now as he describes those intense winter nights on the North Side. Bruce and he would bundle-up in sweatsuits after each performance of "All I Want" and talk the night away, dreaming up scenes for the sequel.

"We'd literally bring our work to bed with us. We'd talk it up in these sweatsuits 'til four in the morning..."

"People had been asking for a sequel for a long, long time. We really did decide there was another story there."

"Some Kind of Life" focuses more closely on the relationship between the mother and son of "All I Want," and on the jealousy the son has for mom's new husband. The worst times are behind them in "Some Kind of Life." The result is a lighter, less moving piece.

Lynn Longos, a 20-year-old Arlington Heights woman, plays the lead in both plays, and acknowledges "Some Kind of Life" doesn't get the same response as the first play.

"We don't get standing ovations for 'Some Kind of Life,' whereas we do for 'All I Want,'" she said.

It's too much to expect lightning to strike twice in the same story.

Lynn got in on "All I Want" on the ground floor, while Bruce was still writing it. Her only previous experience was in high school musicals as a student at Sacred Heart of Mary in Rolling Meadows.

She says she just barely made it through high school, and started taking acting lessons at Mill Run, Niles, while working as a dental assistant in Des Plaines. It was at Mill Run where she met Brian and Bruce, who taught the class.

Bruce tried out a freshly-written scene from "All I Want" on the class, and later called Lynn in for tryouts.

Now Lynn is an established actress with hopes of making it big in films. Almost everybody involved in the two plays talks about going into film. Money, more than anything else, seems to be the reason. Although the actors and director are working on perhaps the most successful production in Chicago, each of them makes just $125 a week — Equity minimum. Because of all the overhead and the limited profit margin, even Brian and Bruce make just $125 a week.

But Lynn is happy to be getting the exposure, regardless of the pay. She's listed with three booking agents, and says she owes it all to Brian and Bruce.

Lynn plays a plucky girl besieged with responsibilities: She pays the rent, looks out for her kid brother, and tries to keep off the barbituates her boyfriend pushes on her. It's quite a switch from her real life in the suburbs, she said.

"I was a spoiled suburban brat. I didn't know what it was like to live in tenements. I learned a lot about people in the play, and how important it is to have a happy family situation.

"I'm working with the best people I could," she said, adding after a pause, "Brian has a little more patience than Bruce."

"Sometime I get so mad at Bruce I could punch him. He's cocky . . . Sometimes he'd make me feel real foolish."

"They both care for your character, though."

Shortly after "Some Kind of Life" opened in January, the actor who played the role of Steven (Lynn's kid brother in the play) hurt his arm and left the cast. Since then, Brian has played Steven.

There's a youthful moisture in Brian's Irish eyes that has kept him playing juvenile roles long beyond his time. As Tom Sawyer, Oliver, and more young punks than he can remember, Brian was a regular in children's theater productions at Mill Run.

His theater background is more extensive than Bruce's, and includes a stint with Chicago's original improvisational group, Second City. Time was when Brian was something of a celebrity, showing his little brother the ropes. But the tables have turned since Bruce's sudden success as a playwright.

"Before 'All I Want,' Bruce was known as my brother. Now I'm known as his brother," said Brian.

Bruce welcomes his new-found status: "I imagine Brian gained a certain degree of respect for me since I produced 'All I Want' by myself."

A little rivalry is to be expected among brothers. What is unusual here is the tremendously productive working relationship Brian and Bruce have developed. They are now working together on the screenplay of "All I Want," and on another film about a family in Humboldt Park. Whenever they work together each works on a different scene, then they switch scripts and re-write each other's work. This process of switching and revising continues until each is happy with the product.

"Our writing styles were so similar that after a while we couldn't tell who wrote what," Brian said.

When a line in "Some Kind of Life" gets a laugh, Brian says they often argue over who wrote it. But their arguments are usually good-natured, and as in the fights they had growing-up together, they don't last long. Brian says each of them is willing to change or scrap something they've written if the other has a legitimate objection.

"Because we're willing to change doesn't mean we don't have large egos. We just want it to be the best it can possibly be. It doesn't pay to be stubborn," Brian said.

In choosing their subject matter, Brian and Bruce follow the maxim of writing only about what they know. What they know so well is the dynamics of family interaction.

"It's one of our favorite subjects — families. We're going to keep writing about it until we get it right," Bruce said.

"I always thought that people having their own bedroom was really symbolic of the type of life they have. Like the mother will say, 'Go to your room!' My mom would say, 'Go to your bed,' and it was just five feet from the kitchen — just like in the play."

These two sons of an Irish truck driver and a Polish Jew work together, ironing out rough dialogue and brainstorming for new ideas. They are incredibly compatible, incredibly alike. Yet, there are differences.

Brian is more introspective, seemingly more complex than Bruce. He thinks hard about a question before he answers it, and speaks quietly, with less regard for his effect on the listener.

Bruce is quicker, more sarcastic than his older brother. His brash simplicity apparently serves him well as a writer. He has a directness that leaves no room for guile or doubt. As a result, the characters he creates are as fresh as he is.

The way Brian and Bruce talk about their working relationship illustrates the differences between the two:

BRIAN: "What's good about it is, when you write alone you tend to get real internal."

BRUCE: "I find you usually know, deep in your heart, if something's real good."

BRIAN: "Sometimes something is real good and you can't tell. You think it's too self-indulgent."

BRUCE: "I always had faith in it ('All I Want'). I got frustrated, but not discouraged. The piece was strong, it had heart to it. I had more faith in the piece than I had in myself sometimes."

Faith. You would have expected Brian to use such a heavy word, but not Bruce. Yet he hit the nail right on the head. Faith in each other and in their work is what makes their relationship so rare, especially rare among brothers.

It frees them to say the simple things brothers rarely say to each other, and to use words most find embarrassingly idealistic:

"The only thing that matters is if it's Truth."

"Writing to me is discovering. It exists already, you don't create it."

"If you don't start with the truth, then it's destined to fail . . ."

Catch them now, these diamonds in the rough. Catch them while they're still zealously tracking Truth . . . still running the purifying gauntlet of nightly performances . . . still living in damp $100 flats on the North Side.

Catch them now, because they might strike it rich in the movies and decide to leave their theatrical poverty — and more — behind. §

movie guide

Designed to help readers decide which movies they want to see, this guide includes a listing of movies currently playing in the Northwest suburban area plus capsule summaries and comments based on reports of the Independent Film Journal, for selected films of interest to readers.

"Annie Hall" — Woody Allen's most serious comedy yet is also uproarious most of the way, as a successful comedian named Alvy Singer battles other people's pretensions and his own insecurities while falling in and out of love with the title character played by Diane Keaton. Some say it is the best film to date (PG).

"The Farmer" — A decorated World War II hero (Gary Conway) faces a fitter, violent homecoming when he tangles with mobsters. The blood flows more freely than the simplistic storyline. (R).

"Cross of Iron" — Sam Peckinpah's graphically violent tale of military savagery on the Russian Front as a glory-obsessed German officer fights for his country's top combat honor at any cost. The moral and message may be black-and-white but the action is vibrantly, sometimes beautifully filmed and generates much gut involvement. (R).

"Audrey Rose" — Anthony Hopkins tries to convince Marsha Mason and John Beck that their daughter is the reincarnation of his own child who was killed in a fiery car crash. (PG).

ARLINGTON — Arlington Heights — 255-2125 — "The Slipper and the Rose" (G).

CATLOW — Barrington — 381-0777 — "King Kong" (PG).

MOUNT PROSPECT CINEMA — Mount Prospect — 392-7070 — Theater 1: "The Sting" (PG); Theater 2: "Roller Coaster" (PG).

DES PLAINES — Des Plaines — 824-5253 — "The Late Show" (PG).

ELK GROVE — Elk Grove — 593-2255 — "Rocky" (PG).

MEADOWS — Rolling Meadows — 392-8898 — "The Farmer" (R) plus "House by the Lake" (R).

PALWAUKEE MOVIES — Prospect Heights — 541-7530 — "Silver Streak" (PG).

PROSPECT — Mount Prospect — 253-7435 — "Rocky" (PG).

RANDHURST CINEMA — Mount Prospect — 392-8393 — "For the Love of Benji" (G).

THUNDERBIRD — Hoffman Estates — 885-9600 — "Airport '77" (PG).

TRADEWINDS CINEMAS — Hanover Park — 289-6707 — Theater 1: "For the Love of Benji" (G); Theater 2: "The Sting" (PG).

WILLOW CREEK — Palatine — 358-1155 — "Annie Hall" (PG).

WOODFIELD — Schaumburg — 882-1620 — Theater 1: "The Sting" (PG); Theater 2: "Go for It" (PG) plus "Gone in 60 Seconds" (PG).

Lakefront:

handicrafts. There also is theater for the children, and pantomime and music galore for folks of all ages.

Such greats as Dizzy Gillespie, George Shearing, Ramsey Lewis and Charlie Byrd have been there. And this year the exposition will be highlighted with a climactic performance by the Stan Kenton Orchestra conducted by Buddy de Franco. Other big names appearing at the festival this year are Anita O'Day, a jazz singer from the Gene Krupa era, and Red Norvo, a jazz vibraphonist who has played with Benny Goodman and his band. The Wild Magnolias, a jazz band from New Orleans will bring to the festival some of the finest toe-tapping sounds ever to vibrate through the warm summer breeze off the Milwaukee lakeshore.

A $15,000 grant has been received by festival coordinators from the National Endowment of the Arts to expand local participation in the show in the areas of visual and performing arts. Included among scheduled performers hailing from the City of Milwaukee are the Friends of the Mime Theatre, Milwaukee Players Children's Theatre, Newberry Brass Quintet, Peter Balme and his classical guitar, and Montage, Milwaukee's own jazz band.

People often go to Milwaukee's annual festival for an introduction to the various art forms, said Carol Reeves, an account executive for the Barkin firm. "They don't realize how inexpensive things can really be," she said. "You can really get some bargain things. There are crafts, photography, ceramics. It's really a quality art fair."

Flashy costumes will be donned by the performers while artists will display soft pastels and blacks and whites. Owners of yachts and ships harbored in the city will sail their crafts en masse along the lakeshore adding to the brilliance of the three-day extravaganza.

Strolling musicians will serenade festival veterans and newcomers alike and demonstrations will afford spectators the chance of a lifetime — to create their own masterpieces to carry home as souvenirs.

Youngsters will dye T-shirts and weave baskets on individual looms. For the older set, there will be wood sculpting and printing sessions. And everything may be taken home.

An additional public service is being offered by festival organizers this year. The Milwaukee Art Center, which grazes the lakefront, will be open free of charge throughout the weekend.

"We want to attract as many people as possible for a quality, exciting free thing," Barkin said. "We want to put on something that families can attend together and give Milwaukee artists an opportunity to show their talents. It's a special kind of talent and everyone can absorb and enjoy the beauty and good music." §

Jackson's valley, the Shangri-La of the Old West

by Katherine Rodeghier

In the days when Northwest Wyoming was still an uncharted wilderness, trappers making their way West scanned the horizon hoping to spot a green valley.

A deep valley encircled by mountains was called a "hole" by the mountain men who cherished these secluded spots that protected them from harsh weather. As winter approached, finding such a sanctuary in the mountainous terrain was indeed a stroke of good luck.

Legend has it that a man by the name of Davey Jackson was one of the first fur trappers to winter in one such "hole" in Northwest Wyoming. Jackson's stories of the place soon spread among the mountain men and the valley became known as "Jackson's Hole."

Today, travelers still search out this green saucer of land amid the Grand Teton mountains. Most come here in summer, some in the fall, to "hole-up" for a few days or a few weeks secluded from the world on the other side of the mountain.

Jackson Hole country, as some folks still call it, is now the Grand Teton National Park. The valley is 50 miles long and 15 miles wide with a backdrop of twenty-two mountain peaks. Nineteen of these peaks are more than 10,000 feet high. The highest, the Grand Teton, is 13,700 feet. The valley itself is called "the mile high valley" because it is 8,400 feet above sea level.

How this beautiful valley got to be a national park is a story that involves none other than John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Rockefeller and his three sons stayed in Jackson Hole Country in the summer of 1926. The following year Rockefeller began to buy lands in that area and he did not stop buying for more than 20 years. In 1949, the 33,000 acres he acquired were deeded to the people of the United States to be preserved in their natural state. Today, the national park is linked to Yellowstone National Park to the north by the John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Memorial Parkway.

Summer days in the valley of the Tetons are warm and sunny but the nights are cool. The average temperature during the summer is 60 degrees with low humidity. Annual rainfall measures 15 inches falling mostly in the spring.

The peak season in the Grand Tetons, as in most national parks, is the summer but there are many people who vacation here in September when most travelers have returned to home and school. Indian summer lasts through the month and often into October and during this period the wildlife are usually more evident. Deer, elk, moose and a myriad of smaller animals are seen grazing throughout the park.

When you tire of lying on your back and looking up into the big blue sky, there are plenty of things to keep you busy in the Grand Tetons. There's rafting on the Snake River, boating and fishing in Jackson Lake, mountain climbing, horseback riding, and you can even take a ride on an old-fashioned buckboard and dine on a hearty outdoor breakfast prepared by a crew of cowboys. There's an 18-hole golf course, swimming pool and six tennis courts available to visitors at the Jackson Hole Golf and Tennis Club.

Accommodations in the Grand Tetons vary in luxury and price from the well-appointed resort facilities of Jackson Lake Lodge, to the rustic accommodations at Jenny Lake Lodge, to the log cabins, tent cabins, and trailer park at Colter Bay Village. These facilities are all operated by Grand Teton Lodge Company and managed by Rock-resorts, Inc. which is headed by Laurance S. Rockefeller.

Jackson Lake Lodge is the focal point of activity in the park. Many of the organized activities in the park begin here and in the evening visitors gather by the huge rock fireplace to chat about the day's adventures.

A good way to learn about Grand Teton is a combination bus and boat tour. Buses leave Jackson Lake Lodge daily at 9 a.m. and travel to museums and scenic areas. The tours are narrated by experienced drivers, who are long time residents of the valley. The highlight of the trip is the boat ride on Jackson Lake and lunch on the shore of Elk Island, a tranquil wooded island affording a panoramic view of the jagged Teton Mountains.

Horseback riding is another favorite activity with vacationers in the Grand Tetons. Horses are matched to the rider's experience and guides lead all group rides. The most popular is the breakfast ride. Each morning before 8 a.m., and in the fresh mountain air of the Tetons, riders young and old, saddle up for a two-hour ride over scenic trails and the famous outdoor range breakfast. Oldsters and young children who do not wish to ride on horseback can make the trip in an old authentic Western buckboard driven by an oldtimer. The buckboard also leaves from the lodge and takes an old trail through an area where moose and beaver have been seen and then to a meadow with a magnificent view of the Grand Teton range.

By the time the horseback riders and the buckboard arrive at their destination, cowboys have started a fire and soon they prepare a real Western breakfast — flapjacks, ham and bacon, scrambled eggs, and hot campfire coffee. When breakfast is ready, the cowboys call out "Come and get it" and visitors get in line for grub. Almost everyone has a terrific appetite in the stimulating mountain air and almost everyone comes up for a second helping.

Another popular activity is the exciting float trip down the twisting Snake River. The journey begins with a short bus ride from Jackson Lake Lodge to the departure area, where passengers board roomy rubber floats. There are two trips from which to choose. The shorter trip lasts about 3 hours and the 20-mile ride lasts about 6 hours. Rafts for the long trip hold twenty-two people and those for the short trip hold eleven. It is advisable to make reservations early for these trips because they are a popular activity with park visitors.

Both trips are led by experienced boatmen. Each of these specially trained river navigators knows the countryside intimately and explains the significant points of interest along the route. Often the guides are professionally trained geologists, biologists or otherwise trained in forestry and backwoods lore.

As the boatmen guide the rafts down the river by means of large wooden sweeps or paddles fitted to the bow and stern, they regale the river traveller with the history and development of the Tetons, pointing out the many varieties of birds which can be spotted from the rafts and the wildlife often seen along the banks. Bull moose stand knee-deep in the cold water, weasels peer out of the trees, osprey, swallows and Canadian geese fly among the trees and rocky cliffs, the antlers of elk rise above the tall summer grass and beaver dams abound in the creeks that empty into the Snake River.

On both raft trips there are visits to Deadman's Bar, and on the 4-hour trip there's a stop made along the bank, where either a continental breakfast or picnic lunch is served.

Among its other credits, Grand Teton National Park boasts one of the nation's best schools of climbing and mountaineering. The school, conducted by Glenn Exum and his staff of skilled climbers, instructs novices and experts alike in the mysteries of scaling the beautiful and challenging Grand Teton Mountain peaks.

Beginners may sign up for classes and for climbs on the South and Middle Teton, Cloud Veil Dome, Nez Perce, and Teewinot Peaks. Instruction in climbing on snow-capped slopes is given on the aptly named Disappointment Peak. Once climbers are familiar with the use of piton, rope and carabiner, they are eligible to climb the three senior mountains in the Jackson Hole area — Mt. Moran, Mt. Owen, and the Grand Teton. Each towers more than 12,000 feet above sea level.

Those who enjoy water sports will be attracted to the lakes, streams and rivers of Grand Teton National Park. Jackson Lake, 18 miles long and 7 miles wide and located at an altitude of 6,772 feet, has numerous coves, islands and secluded beaches for sunbathing as well as for picnics. The deep and winding Snake River, which cuts its way through the valley, has many quiet pools and shallows for picnicking as well. Ox Bow Bend in particular is a favorite spot for a picnic under the aspen trees.

Menor's Ferry allows visitors to the park to cross the Snake River like the early settlers did at the turn of the century. The homemade ferry uses the current of the river for power. The boat has pontoons and crosses the river following an overhead cable. Bill Menor moved into Jackson Hole country in 1892 and homesteaded on the west side of the river. He built the ferry and charged early settlers 50 cents for a team of horses and a wagon and 25 cents for a man with a horse. Pedestrians rode free.

For the angler who is weary of fished-out streams and crowded lakes, Grand Teton National Park offers a fun-filled fishing vacation.

At a time when most of the nation's more accessible fishing grounds are beginning to resemble a bamboo forest of rods and tangled lines, mountain waters teeming with Cutthroat, Mackinaw, and German Brown trout can be reached easily in the beautiful Jackson Hole Country. Jenny Lake, Leigh Lake, and of course Jackson Lake are all fishing waters that will reward the skilled angler. Dry fly fishing produces excellent results along the shorelines late in the evening, with 12 to 14-inch German Browns and Cutthroat rising readily to hackles and coachmen.

For larger fish, deep water trolling is most likely to produce results. Five and six pound Mackinaw live in the deep waters of the lakes and present a genuine challenge to the sportsman who can appreciate the thrill of landing large fighters on light tackle.

The streams in the area — Buffalo River, Gros Ventre River, Pacific Creek and of course the Snake River all have catchable-sized trout. The Snake is broad and in many places quite swift. Flies can be used in the evenings, while spinners will produce good daytime results. Bait-fishing, of course, is always effective.

In general, the Grand Teton lakes are best in the early season, from May through July, while the rivers and streams will produce better catches in the early fall and late summer.

When it comes to accommodations in the Wyoming wilderness the Jackson Lake Lodge is hard to beat since it ranks with the world's major hotels. The lodge is built on a knoll with a sweeping view of the snow-capped Teton Mountains. A series of 60-foot high picture windows frame Jackson Lake and the Teton's spectacular scenery. Although the lodge is located hundreds of miles from any major city, every convenience is available and many perishable foods are flown in fresh daily. The cuisine ranks with the best in the country.

Jackson Lake Lodge is located about five miles from Moran Junction, Wyo. about 36 miles from Jackson, Wyo. and just 23 miles from the South Gate of Yellowstone National Park. There are forty-two rooms in the main lodge and 343 in the adjacent motor lodge. The Mural Dining Room seats 525 persons at a serving with 100 more in the adjoining Pioneer Room. The lodge also has a 650-seat auditorium and two heated pools.

Jackson Lake Lodge will be open through Sept. 18 this year and rates are $28 to $44 single and $31 to $46 double. A three night package plan is available at $148.20 single and $112.35 double which includes room in the motor lodge, eight meals, six hour bus and boat trip and the six hour float trip on the Snake River.

Nearby Jenny Lake Lodge has rates beginning at $90 a day for two persons, breakfast and dinner included. The lodge will be open this year from June 15 to Sept. 5.

Jenny Lake Lodge was originally Jenny Lake Ranch. It was homesteaded in 1922 and opened as a dude ranch a year later. The atmosphere at Jenny Lake is comfortable but informal. There are thirty cabin cottages with slab terraces, private baths and electric heaters. Furnishings include two easy chairs per room, a writing desk, chest of drawers and beds with headboards adapted from the old bedsteads.

Budget accommodations are available in Colter Bay Village, named for John Colter, a famous fur trapper and member of the Lewis and Clark expeditions. Facilities include log cabin accommodations, tent cabins, a trailer area with complete hook-up, a chuck wagon-style restaurant, fountain-grill, general store, where groceries can be purchased, marina, service station, corral, tap-room, John Colter Bar, a launderette, gift shop, tackle shop and boat shop where canoes and boats can be rented. Nearby the National Park has an amphitheater, swimming beach, campground, and Indian Arts Museum.

The log cabin accommodations are the same log cabins that were once the homes of early settlers in Jackson Hole. The cabins, many of which are more than 100 years old, are situated near the wooded shoreline of Jackson Lake. Nearly 200 cabins were moved to this location from various spots throughout the valley. Although the interiors have been restored with private shower-baths, electric heating and single and double bed accommodations, the atmosphere remains pioneer.

For those who prefer camping to cabins, the facilities of Colter Bay Tent Village include seventy-two structures constructed of canvas and logs. Rentals are available for everything necessary to camping including sleeping bags, cots, cooking and eating utensils. Each unit has its own parking space, built-in outdoor grill, table with benches, wood burning stove in the bedroom, and a covered patio. A conveniently located utility building contains toilets and basins.

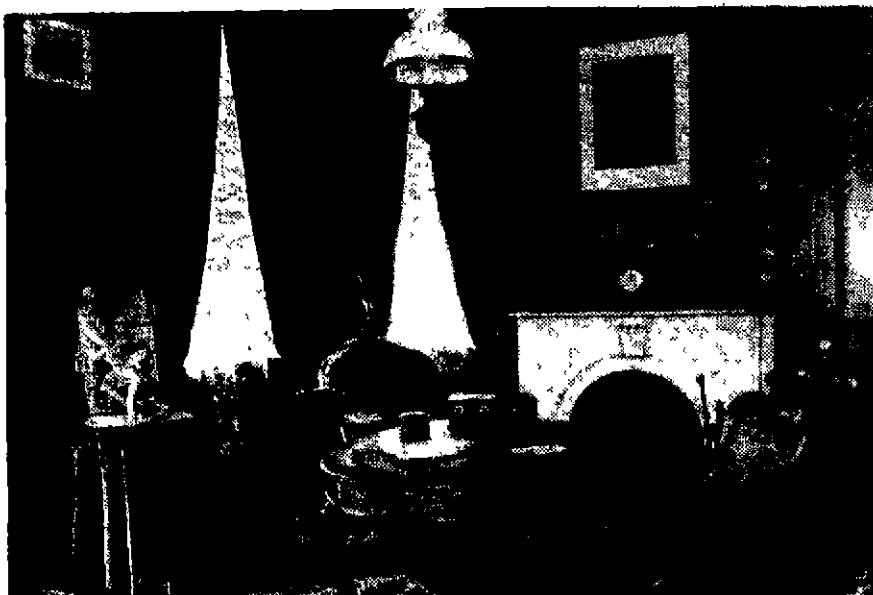

Colter Bay Village facilities are open through Oct. 1 this year. Log cabin accommodations start at $12 a day for a semi-private bath and $17 to $27 per day for a one room cabin with private bath. Two-room cabins accommodating up to six persons with connecting bath rents for $28 to $35 per day. Tent cabins are $9 a day for one or two persons and $11 for three or four persons. The daily charge in the trailer area is $6 per space covering utilities and other costs.

Grand Teton Lodge Company has buses operating daily between Colter Bay Village, Jackson Lake Lodge and Jenny Lake Lodge as well as Jackson, Wyo. Buses operating from Yellowstone National Park terminate at Jackson Lake Lodge. Amtrak maintains sleeper service to Rock Springs, Wyo. and Frontier Airlines provides daily direct plane service from Salt Lake City, Denver and Billings to Jackson Airport.

There is a central reservations office for Jackson Lake Lodge, Jenny Lake Lodge and Colter Bay Village. To make reservations write Grand Teton Lodge Company, P.O. Box 240, Moran, Wyo. 83013 or phone 307-543-2855. §

Jackson Hole Country, as some folks still call it, is a green saucer of land amid the towering Teton. A wide range of accommodations are available in the valley operated by the Grand Teton Lodge Company and there's plenty of activities to keep folks busy like horseback riding, rafting down the Snake River, mountain climbing, boating and fishing and there's an 18-hole course and six courts at the Jackson Hole Golf and Tennis Club.

Take your pick from two events set this weekend

Travelers looking for something a bit different this weekend need only decide whether to travel east or west on I-90 to one of two special events taking place this weekend

To the east is the annual Bavarian Festival in Frankenmuth, Mich., where festivities begin tonight and conclude next Saturday. To the west is Galena, Ill., and the June Open House of historic homes which is being held today and tomorrow.

The 19th annual Bavarian Festival in Frankenmuth begins with the popular drum and bugle corps competition on the high school athletic field. Adding some American folklore to the Bavarian atmosphere is the square dance also set for this evening. Sponsored by a local square dance club, the occasion features American music and dancing, combined with food and refreshments. Tomorrow morning early arrivals may enjoy a pancake breakfast at the Main Street Middle School.

Last year the one o'clock Sunday afternoon parade drew more than 100,000 viewers and this year's lineup of nearly 100 units, depicting the theme, "Bavarian Heritage," promises to beckon even more spectators. They'll be lining Main Street where store fronts have been remodeled to Bavarian style architecture. There's also an authentic Maibaum (Maypole), the famous Bavarian Inn Glockenspiel (35-bell carillon), the Wetter Haus (Weather Vane), a Zwiebelsturm (onion tower), and much more.

The entire community gets into the spirit by donning Bavarian costumes. The women and girls wear their colorful dirndls, the men and boys wear their lederhosen. Added to the costuming is the good German food and beverage that is part of the community's Bavarian heritage. The Spas Platz, meaning "fun place," is the main dancing and entertainment center. Located in Heritage Park under a 17,000 square foot tent, the Spas Plaza houses up to 5,000 visitors. Beer, food, and dancing to live polka music on a 5,000 square foot dancing floor provide a fun-filled evening. The Family Tent, or Sommer Garten, next to the Spas Platz, also offers continuous entertainment by nationally famous polka bands and Frankenmuth's own Marv Herzog. Barbecued chicken dinners are served in the Family Tent area

Arts and crafts exhibits attest to one of the educational merits of the festival. Housed in a permanent building and under a 60x150 foot tent, exhibitions from all over the U.S., as well as special exhibits by local craftsmen, are displayed to the public. Among the special demonstrations to be held daily are: candle dipping, charcoal artist, bird house building, rug weaving, terrarium planting, pottery wheel, macramé and scrimshawing.

From the Carling Park in downtown Frankenmuth a shuttle bus takes visitors to and from the festival grounds. Frankenmuth is about a 6½-hour drive from the Northwest suburbs and can be reached by taking either I-90 or I-94 to I-69, then north on I-69 through Lansing to I-75, then north to the Frankenmuth exit.

Five "yesterday-today" homes will be open to the public during the Tenth Annual June Open House, sponsored by the Galena Historical Society, today and tomorrow. Two of the houses to be seen this year are stately mansions of the 1850's, furnished in elaborate 18th and 19th century style. Another is a typical Galena brick hillside residence of the 1840's. And two, Craig Cottage and Telford House, both started out as very simple homes, enlarged by later owners.

Craig Cottage has seen many events during its lifetime. A huge, rocky cavern, hewn from the home's foundation and extending out under the front lawn, was formerly a hiding place when Indians threatened Galena's few white settlers 150 years ago. There were Winnebago uprisings when the house was built. Then, in 1832, came the Black Hawk War when citizens huddled in their own shelters (such as this) or hurried to town to seek refuge in the Perry Street Stockade (now a tourist attraction).

The home's upstairs rooms, added more recently, are formal. There's a pine and brick fireplace in the sunny living room, with a Seth Thomas 1840 clock and German bisque monks on the mantel. Among the treasures on the dresser is a majolica bowl backed by a Royal Munich plate. There's just room for a fourposter bed in the tiny bedroom with its toile wallpaper. Downstairs is the original Craig cabin, with limestone walls 18 inches thick and a huge stone fireplace. An old Galena cabinet in the miniature kitchen displays Flow Blue china, tin molds, and tin kitchen items.

High on a hilltop overlooking Old Town is Mount Fort, a traditional Galena brick home that contains many happy surprises. One room is decorated with bird prints, miniature birds, toy soldiers and model cars and antique toys and dolls are scattered throughout the house.

Another newcomer to the tour this year is stately Stillman Manor, built in the 1850's by a wealthy Galena merchant. Ornately furnished, some of its treasures include a Lincoln mourning portrait and a Wells Fargo desk in the Library; and an authentic fainting couch in the elegant yellow drawing room.

Visitors are also invited to view two houses seen in previous years, but back on the Tour by popular demand. One is the Manor, built 120 years ago by pioneer-entrepreneur Hezekiah H. Gear. Finding it a shell, the owners have logged more than 10,000 hours in loving restoration and have filled its cool spaces with exquisite furnishings of Chippendale, Hepplewhite and Queen Ann design.

Telford House was built in 1845, restored in 1910 and again in the 1950's. It contains many Galena antiques, as well as some "antiques of the future."

Other attractions this weekend include a Lamplight Tour of the U.S. Grant home tonight; a special narrated slide showing of "Galena Yesterday-Today;" and a Farmer's Market in Old Market Square. Galena is noted for its museums, antique shops and art galleries.

Tour tickets are $5.50 for adults and $2 for children, and include round-robin bus service and admission to the Historical Society's museum on Bench Street. Homes are open 9 to 5 each day but no tickets will be sold after 3 p. m. tomorrow. For further information write the Galena Historical Society or phone 815/771-0203.

Galena is about a 3-hour drive from the Northwest suburbs and can be reached by taking I-90 to Rockford and then proceeding west on U.S. Rte 20 to Galena.

United proposes a rule for guaranteeing fare

United Airlines has proposed a Guaranteed Fare Rule which would assure passengers they would not have to pay more than the fare in effect at the time a ticket was purchased.

In comments filed recently with the Civil Aeronautics Board, airline officials said existing practices call for the collection of additional money if a fare increase has been approved after a ticket has been bought but before a trip has begun.

United favors permitting a passenger who has made a reservation and purchased a ticket for a flight to fly at the price in effect at the time of ticket purchase, regardless of later price changes.

Infrequent travelers are often unaware of fare increases between the time of ticket purchase and the time of travel. They learn of the increase when they reach the gates for their flights and must pay additional money. In general, passengers do not understand why purchasing air transportation should not be the same as purchasing a commodity such as furniture: they paid the stated price when they placed their order, and they expect their transportation for that price.

First Global Gourmet Tour is set next month

On July 31, 1977, twenty food and wine lovers will embark at Los Angeles upon the luxury around-the-world Global Gourmet Tour, the first of its kind. The trip ends on a truly high note: a Concorde flight from Paris to Washington DC on September 4th.

Lasting 36 days, it will explore the foods and beverages in twelve gastronomic capitals Tokyo, Hong Kong, Bangkok, Jakarta, Bombay, Istanbul, Vienna, Rome, Monte Carlo, Lyon, Beaune (in the Burgundy Wine Country), and Paris.

Personally hosting the entire journey is authority Howard Hillman, who has written a nationwide series of wining and dining guide books, has taught international wine and food courses, has rated restaurants for America's largest newspaper, and is the author of the forthcoming Encyclopedia of World Cuisines.

The Global Gourmet is strictly deluxe and features such touches as first-class air travel on scheduled airlines; deluxe-grade accommodations in the finest hotels; various lunches, dinners and banquets at some of the world's great restaurants (with the rest of the meals provided on an a la carte unrestricted basis at the hotels as part of the tour package); and carefully designed sightseeing. Lunches and dinners will be taken at four of the 3-star restaurants in France, climaxed with a Black-Tie Gala Banquet at the famed Lasserre restaurant in Paris.

The tour is limited to just twenty persons. The all-inclusive price is $9,830 per person, based on double occupancy.

'Haywire' is a triumph of courage

by Norman Nadel

After hundreds of years and thousands of life stories, there probably is no genuinely new way to write an autobiography. But Brooke Hayward, making her literary debut with "Haywire" (Knopf, $10), hit the best-seller list because her book is conspicuously different, notably in the way it starts.

As a young woman, she goes to keep an appointment with her sister, but gets no response when she knocks at Bridget's apartment. Brooke is worried, thinks about having the elevator man unlock the door for her, then decides maybe she'd better not.

Later in the day the door is opened, the young girl inside is found dead, with medical evidence that she died some time after Brooke had rung the doorbell. Bridget was epileptic, and also might have taken some kind of sedation. Nevertheless, Brooke knows that if she had acted earlier, she might have saved her.

It is a harrowing scene for the reader — as it was, and continues to be, for Miss Hayward. Yet almost immediately the book plunges into another; the sudden death of Brooke's beautiful, talented and still-young mother, actress Margaret Sullivan.

So from the beginning, you are beyond the point of withdrawing from Brooke's family or from her own lively, sensitive and sometimes anguished mind. What is perhaps even more surprising is the fact that after such an introduction, "Haywire" does not let you down.

Not that the whole book is as dramatic, and traumatic, as those particular episodes. Still, it continues to defy expectations. For one thing, it is as much a biography of the Hayward family as it is an autobiography of the author, a point she emphasizes in talking about it.

For another, it was an unusual family. Leland Hayward was for years one of the best talent agents in the business, and, later, one of Broadway's most successful producers. His union with Margaret Sullivan was the third of his five marriages. She had been married once before, to actor Henry Fonda, and she married again after she and Hayward were divorced.

For the three Hayward children, it was a lively life, strangely blended of unusual freedom and strict discipline. In California they played with the Fonda children, Peter and Jane, who lived with their parents up the road; in Connecticut they lived a quite different life. Leland loved California; Margaret wanted the rural life in New England. Those were tokens of deeper differences.

Asked how she came to start the book with two of its three most anguished episodes — her father's death concludes the account — Miss Hayward answers: "The amazing thing is that I did it at all. I'd never published anything and I was not a spring chicken" (36 when she began the book, 39 now).

"The decision to start at that high pitch was not mine. Jones Harris, son of the producer Jed Harris, had always encouraged me to write. He said, 'You really ought to start with your sister; the most difficult day in your life. Recall everything you did, put it down'. That was why I began with that day. It seemed to me that day was a metaphor for all that was to come.

"One other reason for writing this book was my sense of guilt for having survived all these people — my sister, my parents. And in Bridget's case the guilt was even more palpable because I've never quite recovered from the knowledge that I could have saved her if I'd just gone into that apartment.

"So it is partly the guilt of the survivor, and guilt because I did not say everything I could have said to my parents and my sister, to tell them how much I cared, and sometimes how angry I was. I never revealed my feelings; we were taught in my family never to give way to our feelings."

Writing has eased Brooke Hayward's sense of guilt. "As I wrote the book it became much more complex, more layered, and the material much richer than I thought it would be. It became important to bring my parents back to life, so I could see them, hear them, talk to them.

"I wept a good deal when I wrote. But it was in the three or four times I fully restored them to life that I felt I'd achieved what I'd set out to do, which was to express what I really felt about them and to give words to the thoughts that were in my head."

Twice married, twice divorced, with three children, the strikingly beautiful Brooke Hayward all but ignores her adult life in "Haywire." She thinks it would have detracted from her story of a family.

But her editor, her publisher and increasingly, her reading public, want more. There is, at the very least, another autobiography in her, covering the second half of her life to this point.

Readers will wait, though not patiently. (NEA)

Rather's own story of the making of a newsman

THE CAMERA NEVER BLINKS by Dan Rather (Morrow, $10)

Reviewed by Diane Mermigas

You can almost hear Dan Rather reading aloud the words of his new book "The Camera Never Blinks" as if he were hosting weekly segments of "Who's Who" and "60 Minutes."

That's just the way the book is written. It is a personal and thoughtful look at his own professional growth and experiences, and the flow of historical events and figures that he has rubbed up against during his career as a CBS newsmen.

It is a sometimes angry and idealistic television journalist who recalls his days as a White House correspondent during the Watergate years when the President and his men were less than friendly toward him.

Rather, a good-looking Texan with northern polish and accent, seems to have a well-balanced view of himself. He has been tagged over the years as a news agitator who would respectfully challenge any man — even the president.

He portrays himself as a young man ready to conquer the world. His roots are familiar to many journalists of his age. Rather's father was a pipeliner, which meant that "he dug ditches for a fair amount of his lifetime" and his mother was a waitress who was "fresh off the farm."

Those were humble beginnings, but his childhood was saturated with radio and written news. His father was a compulsive reader who contributed to what Rather says is his unquenchable thirst for the news.

The man who picked up where his father left off in helping to develop Rather's journalistic instincts was a college professor named Hugh Cunningham.

After that, it was just a matter of putting in a good deal of effort at the right time, in the right place.

The coverage of a wicked storm in Houston for a local radio station in the fall of 1961 landed him a network job with CBS. His career took him to Alabama in the days of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Dallas the day that John F. Kennedy was assassinated, Washington for the Lyndon B. Johnson presidency, Vietnam during the heated days of war and the Nixon White House during the Watergate scandal and the "unmaking" of a President.

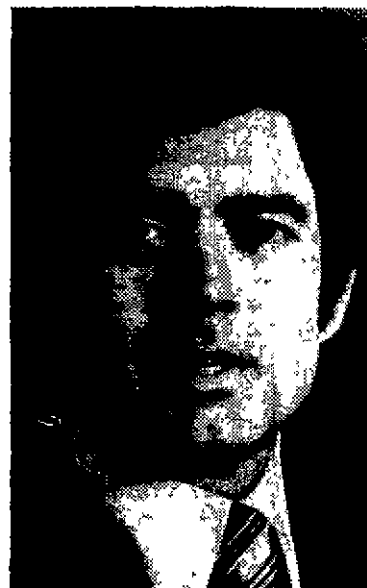

In recalling his conversations and dealing with persons who have since become history, Rather relates his work in a physical sense. The reader comes to know him as a deep-thinking, blurr of motion. He is an old fashioned newsmen who is preoccupied with "the scoop" and getting the news out to the public before his competition.

It is a very human account. He talks freely about his feelings, he tells of the second thoughts he had after he told CBS Radio in New York that, to the best of his knowledge, President Kennedy had been shot and was dead. That day in Dallas, Rather ran all the way back to his studio after the shots had been fired on the President's motor-cade. A doctor and a priest at Parkland Hospital, where Kennedy was taken, told him the President was dead.

He had informed his superiors in New York almost too objectively, without emotion. Now the whole country was being told about the tragedy. What if his information was wrong?

"What I kept thinking was this: We are ahead of the story. I wasn't yet considering the human and national tragedy behind it.

Right or wrong I was thinking about the story."

There are many portions of this book that are fascinating. But throughout, Rather seems to be almost apologizing for the way he has had to do his work. He continually raises the question of his credibility with viewers, and repeatedly stresses the fact that he tries to go about his journalistic chores with the greatest amount of objectivity and fairness.

Rather shows an almost compulsive need to explain his actions: "I went to my job everyday determined to be as fair and as accurate as humanly possible. At the end of each day, I didn't ask myself, do they like me, or do they like what I did? I asked myself, did I meet my own standards for this day? And if I had, then I slept well. If I hadn't, I tossed and turned and asked myself, how can I do better tomorrow?"

Rather's account of his rise to prominence in television journalism is refreshing in many ways. It alerts readers to the fact that newsmen are human, they make mistakes, they have feelings about the events they cover and the people they meet along the way.

Rather discusses the recent evolution of newsmen as celebrities — a tendency he said he will go out of his way to avoid.

Yet, any boy from Texas who ultimately finds himself publically locking horns with a President and dodging bombs in Vietnam has a story to tell and can't help but become a public figure himself.

Giancana's life gives insight into organized crime

THE DON: THE LIFE AND DEATH OF SAM GIANCANA by William Brashler (Harp-er and Row, $10.95).

Reviewed by Bernadine Rechner

They found him murdered in the basement of his Oak Park home — a shocking, if predictable end for one of Chicago's top hoodlums, Sam "Mooney" Giancana.

"The Don," Bill Brashler's third book, is a swiftly moving chronicle of Giancana's life and death; a sometimes horrifying, sometimes humorous history of the man, the city, the era that spawned him and his notorious associates.

Brashler begins at the Turn of the Century, when Giancana's father emigrated from Sicily to become a street peddler scratching out an existence in "The Patch," a west side area now home to the University of Illinois.

Through vivid, descriptive prose we see the crowded, isolated ethnic community, its streets thick with vendors, housewives, and children; the smell of pasta and home-made wine hangs in the air. Ethnic battled ethnic in street wars and the police left them alone to solve their own problems. Young thugs were the only ones who had money in their pockets and wore fancy clothes.

Into this environment on March 24, 1906, Salvatore Giancana was born, the second child but the first son of Antonio and Lena Giancana, the child who would carry on the family name. In later years, the son would be called Sam, or "Mooney" because he was said to be unpredictable and kind of crazy, and he would change the spelling of his last name.

He began his life of crime early, ripping off vending machines, snatching clothes from clotheslines, tires, hood ornaments, cars. He became a member of the 42 Gang, a group of young thugs who ran booze and operated a burglary ring. His special forte was "Wheel-man" and he had a lifelong love affair with cars. At 18, he was convicted and jailed for auto theft; a later jail term introduced him to a Chicago policy boss and when he returned to the streets, he joined the rackets.

The book details Giancana's rise to the top of the criminal hierarchy, the muscle he used to stay there and the grisly methods employed to eliminate witnesses, informants and the disloyal. It discusses his associations with Capone mobsters and with celebrities — Frank Sinatra, Keely Smith, Phyllis McGuire. It looks at his quiet, traditional home life with a wife and three daughters, and his participation in criminal operations that stretched across the country.

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation mounted the most concerted efforts to break up Giancana's organization. Brashler describes a bizarre episode in which the federal government had a golden opportunity to depose him — and failed.

For Giancana's refusal to testify before a grand jury, he was cited for contempt and jailed for almost a year. Following his release, he fled to Mexico. His power ebbed and threats of prosecution made him a danger to organized crime. In 1975, a still unidentified gunman removed the threat.

"The Don" is a fascinating look at the complexities of organized crime and of the punk kid who rose to its upper echelon. A smoothly flowing narrative, it is a virtual roll call of crooks, celebrities and law enforcement officials, some dead, some still living. In a sense, it could be background information, a basis for understanding the gangland executions of the past several months — grim reminders that organized crime did not die with Sam Giancana.

A remarkable review of the dance world

WATCHING THE DANCE GO BY by Marcia B. Siegel (Houghton Mifflin, $12.50)

Reviewed by Lynn Asinof

The world of dance is an ephemeral place. No two performances are ever the same, and ballets change as the dancers mature and grow old.

Part of the beauty of dance is that there is no way to preserve it. A moment passes, and neither videotape, labnotation nor copious writing can bring it back in the same form.

The one thing that does remain is the perception of that moment. It is those perceptions which Marcia B. Siegel has recorded in her new book "Watching the Dance Go By."

The book is a collection of reviews — a personal look at the past five years of dance. "They do fix a time, a viewpoint — what I saw when it went past," Miss Siegel says in her introduction. "So this is my history as well as a fragment of dances. The limits of both seem important to preserve."

The remarkable thing about Miss Siegel's writing is her ability to translate movement into words. Take for example, her description of Twyla Tharp's choreography, which has set the dance world on its ear:

"She mixes up the order of energies, starting fast and ending slow. She makes the stage space all bunched up and busy sometimes instead of clear and symmetrical. She feints around the edges of things that are supposed to be hammering you into your seat, and she evades climaxes that have been working out the same way for generations."

Nothing is sacred to Miss Siegel. She dismisses American Ballet Theatre's principal Eleanor D'Antuono by saying, "She has her fans. I am not one."

One of her most interesting reviews written in the winter of 1974-75 pinned down what is so troublesome about the dancing of superstar Rudolph Nureyev. While other critics prefer to sidestep the famous Russian, Miss Siegel minced no words.

"In an altered costume — a get-up with a dark red robe slashed above the hipbones to provide the audience with a provocative view of fuchsia tights encasing the celebrated legs and crotch — the star pranced and stumbled, emoted and tossed his hair and gnashed his teeth, and failed to do the steps."

The criticism not only looks at a single performance but also records shifts and changes in the dance world. In the book, Miss Siegel discusses issues like the impact of government subsidy, the failings of the star system and the merging of ballet and modern techniques.

Although the book focuses on the New York City dance world, where there are some 2,000 performances each year, Chicago audiences will know many of the dancers, companies and ballets mentioned.

It is fun to test your perceptions against Miss Siegel's, but the book is most rewarding because it has its finger on the dance pulse of the country.

A tragic story of murder, incest, rage and religion

THE BLOODWORTH ORPHANS, by Leon Forrest, (Random House, $10).

Reviewed by Wandalyne Rice

Reason says the line between literary excellence and nonsense ought to be wide and clear. Unfortunately, particularly with ambitious authors, that isn't always the case.

In "The Bloodworth Orphans," Leon Forrest crosses the line, giving us a novel that has brilliant individual passages, but no underlying current of sense.

"The Bloodworth Orphans" plot, such as it is, is the tragedy of a charismatic black man who becomes a leader in a fundamentalist church, and who falls in love with a dedicated and devout nurse during the death agony of his foster mother, a "saint" to the churchgoers.

The lovers, who retire to bed on the same day the saintly Rachel Flowers dies, discover at the funeral they are brother and sister from an unknown brother, Amos-Otis Thigpen, a haunted man who has been searching for his genealogy. Ultimately, the woman, LaDonna Scales and her preacher-lover Regal Pettibone, are killed — LaDonna by Thigpen in an avenging rage, and Pettibone by anonymous members of the church congregation, who attack him as he stands over Rachel's grave, holding LaDonna's body.

That action, if it can be described as the principal action in this muddled book, takes up very little of the novel's 383 pages. Most of it consists of sometimes brilliant, sometimes tedious stream-of-consciousness internal dialogues by various characters, with an occasional description thrown in.

The one thing that is clear about the novel is that Forrest, who was once editor of the Black Muslim newspaper "Muhammed Speaks," wants the reader to go beyond the "objective" facts of the story. Since so much of the book is taken up with discussions of religion, Jesus, and Satan and since even the one Black Muslim who appears in the book is haunted and apparently derives no peace from his faith, the point must be about the bawlow relationship of man and God, or at least man and religion.

This hypothesis about the novel's deeper meaning is borne out by the ending. Nominal narrator of the story, lapsed Catholic Nathaniel Witherspoon and Noah Grandberry, an at least half-mad former musician, hole up in a Holiday Inn with an infant they rescue from a red and white boot box in the middle of a street-gang war.

But what, the reader is left wondering, could this baby possibly symbolize? A Messiah? Another offspring of the fated, incestuous family of Regal and LaDonna? Or nothing at all?

The questions, which could be intriguing if raised properly, don't puzzle a reader for long. Any meaning to the story has long since been buried in so much prose that it has become irrelevant. Too often, the only thing in a reader's mind is to get through any page without sensory overload. What can anyone make of a sentence, which goes on for forty and a-half lines, thirty of which are a parenthetical pause in which the narrator is reminded of events ranging from his fear at hiding a diabetic father's hypodermic needles to the rape of a girl by her father "after finding" her in the basement copulating with the family dog, "Prince"?

That kind of narrative excess is characteristic of "The Bloodworth Orphans" and ultimately succeeds in drowning even the most patient reader.

Gardner fills in the blanks of Chaucer's life

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF CHAUCER by John Gardner (Knopf, $12.50).

Reviewed by Victor Howes

John Gardner, novelist and medievalist, a writer whose publications range from "Grendel" and "October Light" to scholarly pieces on the Wakefield Cycle of plays, has written the most readable life of Chaucer we are likely to have.

Not much is known about Chaucer, and what we do know is veiled in mists of obscurity. He was born about 1340, died in 1400, served at court under Edward III and Richard II. He went on various diplomatic missions to France and Italy, held office as a customs official and a clerk of the Royal Works. He was a close friend of one of England's most powerful magnates, John of Gaunt. He wrote the "Canterbury Tales" and "Troilus and Criseyde."

Beyond these secure perimeters of fact, darkness hovers. Was he happily married? Were his children his own? Was his wife the sister of the wife of John of Gaunt? These and many questions like them make the riddle of Chaucer's private life.

Why should we care, when we can read the poems Chaucer wrote? Gardner will get you involved if once you start reading him. By a process he calls "the play of fancy on the lost world's dust and scrapings" Gardner dresses out history's dry bones into a royal feast. He sets Chaucer securely against the rich backdrop of the Middle Ages, its crowded houses, dangerous streets, jousts, tennis games, courtly and platonic lovers.

Is that Chaucer studying Macrobius by fluttering candlelight — "the children all in bed, Philippa across the dim, shuttered room from him, fashioned small needlepoint flowers in vermilion and gold"?

What we don't know about Chaucer would fill a book, and John Gardner has filled one, with immense help from his novelist's imagiination and his historical researches. Aided also by an army of words and phrases like "presumably," "undoubtedly," and "it seems reasonable to hazard."

This is speculative biography, but based on careful assumptions: Gardner agrees and disagrees with his predecessors in judicious fashion, and if he is not right, well, as T. S. Eliot said, "If we can never be right, it is best, from time to time, to change our ways of being wrong."

Meanwhile, we hear that Chaucer was stout. He was a worrier, inept at love (an irony?) and a man who read till his head swam. Gardner is a subtle student of Chaucer's work, quick to spot a concealed allusion, on guard for a sly pun, a subtle shift of tone, all the indirections that make Chaucer so elusive a poet.

The reader of this book may not come much closer to the "real life" Chaucer than he would in a textbook outline of that daily life. But he will come closer to the man who wrote the "Tales" and the "Book of the Dutchess," the born survivor, the balanced philosopher, the wise and witty observer of men and women, our greatest poet next to Shakespeare and a master of that "craft so longe to lerne."

Hardcover debut for this Barbara Cartland novel

LOVE LOCKED IN by Barbara Cartland (Dutton, $6.95)

Reviewed by Nancy Reese

Popular romance novelist, Barbara Cartland, has cranked out yet another historical romance. Her first romantic work to be published first in hardcover, the novel contains all the right ingredients for a juicy tale: a young couple in love, a kidnapping and an attempted murder.

The 30-year-old Duc de Savigne, because of disappointment in love at 21, is wallowing in the worst depravity Paris society has to offer. Following on the heels of the peasant rebellion of 1830, his behavior is viewed with disfavor and in hope of reforming him, his mother urges him to marry.

The beautiful bride who is chosen for him is the essence of innocence, tucked away all her life in the country with her writer father. A paragon of virtue, she believes the Duc is a knight in white armor.

Set in the Touraine region of France, the action, though choppy, moves along quickly as our young heroine is first kidnapped by hungry peasants then almost killed by a shadowy figure from the Duc's past. In fine hero style, he rescues her from the villagers, rights the wrongs they have suffered and kills her attacker in the nick of time.

Although Miss Cartland has produced a well-thought out story line with a tight plot, the characters are mere shells and attention to details is sloppy. Apparently after 200 successful novels, with as many as nineteen written in one year, she is less concerned with quality. Her earlier novels are more smoothly written and the characters are more alive.

In several recent interviews, the author has expressed her lack of concern with whether her work is considered good literature. Maybe so, but her fans deserve more, especially in a hardcover debut.

RETURN TO THE GATE By William Corlett (Bradbury Press, $6.95, young adults)

Reviewed by Cathy Collison

Most young people will see through William Corlett's attempt at a significant novel. In "Return to the Gate," a sequel to two other books, Corlett dwells on the trite and espouses the mundane. The plot sounds good, but the story fails.

Somewhere, sometime in the future, an old man lives alone in a dilapidated house. It's a time of great shortage, government rationing and military control. The old man is lucky enough to have an apple tree for extra food and nearby woods for fire logs. Soon he notices apples being stolen. In a silly furor, he accuses a commune — at war with the village establishment — of stealing. But it is Helen, a homeless waif, who steals his provisions and later cares for him.

The old man's vague philosophizing interrupts the story of Helen. Unlike some of Ray Bradbury's visionary gems, this adult-child story lacks any real emotion or tenderness. The obvious moral of human dependence is spoiled by the author's preachy and condescending style.

I'D LIKE TO TRY A MONSTER'S EYE by Judith Thurman (Atheneum, $6.50, ages 3-6)

Reviewed by Marge Finch

Did you ever look at the world through a monster's eye, or wonder what the ocean looks like to a codfish? "I'd Like to Try a Monster's Eye" is an exciting new book which provides children a wonderful starting place for their imaginations to grow.

The book is by Judith Thurman, who has written several poetry books, including "Flashlight and other Poems," which is a collection of her own poetry for children. There are very few words in this book, as it is written for three to six year olds, but each word is beautifully stated and blends perfectly with the illustrations. "... Monster's Eye" presents an unusual perspective. From a bug's eye view things can look pretty frightening as a large foot is bearing down, and an acrobat, high up on a wire, sees people as tiny little specks. Grandma's view might look pretty fuzzy without her glasses, and hands look awfully large to baby brother as you reach down to pick him up. What if you were a miner? "A mile down it's blind night, An unseen world waits for my miner's light..." And if you were a plant "an inch down it's night, too, I inch up, out... Hey, Spring, Hey Sun! I'm a SPROUT!"

Reina Rubel is the illustrator, and her drawings are clear, bright, and imaginative. A picture of what the beach looks like to a small child is drawn from a child's eye view with a landscape of adult knees and legs. All of the pictures are imaginative and delicate, done in shades of green and red, with black outlining and shading.

Children can think of a wealth of other ways the world might look by letting their imaginations wander through many different eyes. "I'd Like to Try a Monster's Eye" is a perfect starting place to spark the imagination of young (and old).

A psychiatrist lashes out at his colleagues

PSYCHIATRIC SLAVERY by Thomas Szasz (Macmillan, $8.95)

Reviewed by Dorothy Oliver

A crime has been committed.

Thomas Szasz believes the crime is the involuntary institutionalization of persons labeled as "mentally ill." He documents his position in his fourteenth book, "Psychiatric Slavery," and therein lies the crime.

Szasz premise is fascinating. His book is almost unreadable.

Here is a topic that is timely, especially today when a rash of violent crimes committed by former mental patients has exploded into a state-wide controversy. Here is a topic that is of interest to a large lay audience simply because mental illness touches so many lives. Here is a topic that is hidden behind legalese, repetition, and endless verbiage.

Szasz is a brilliant but highly controversial man. He is a noted psychiatrist who can evoke catcalls from a sedate gathering of his colleagues. In 1974 he spoke here at a Forest Hospital - sponsored lecture series and received an angry reaction from his audience.

He says it is libel to call a person mentally ill. He says the "highest form of psychiatric criminality" is preventing a person from committing suicide. He says psychotherapy is a waste of time, that drugs should never be used in treatment and is appalled by shock therapy. He says things like "psychiatric imbecility" and "paternalistic social reformers." He is a staunch believer in patient rights, in human rights, and defines involuntary commitment as slavery, comparing it to the enslavement of blacks.

Obviously Szasz has a lot of say. Unfortunately you only get fragments in this book.

Szasz spent three days in February 1976 lecturing at the University of Cincinnati College of Law and says his book is an expansion of those lectures, it's basic problem. "Psychiatric Slavery" reads like a lecture. It is overwhelmed by court decisions and excerpts from court briefs. One of the two cases taken up in the book is that of Kenneth Donaldson a Florida man who was involuntarily committed to a hospital by his parents and spent years in the institution without receiving treatment. Donaldson refused therapy because he maintained he was sane. The eventual court case dwelled on his right to treatment as a mental patient rather than whether he should have been committed in the first place. The second case involved a man arrested for panhandling in Chicago and found to have more than $24,000 in his briefcase. Rather than ordering the man to bank the cash, the judge committed him to protect him from people who might steal his money.

Szasz is irate over the fate of these two men and the thousands of people forced into mental institutions against their will. But the psychiatrist's thoughts too often get tangled in a web of his own words: "The 'patient' may not have an illness at all, for example, because 'Mental Illness' is not an illness; or he may not have the illness imputed to him, although such an illness exists, because he was falsely diagnosed; or, once confined, he may not be treated; or 'he treatment may be ineffective or even harmful.'"

A reader can rail at Szasz but at the same time must question how "Psychiatric Slavery" ever got past an editor in its present form.

The book is without a doubt worthwhile. It indicts the psychiatric profession as a whole and the practice of involuntary commitment in particular. It is thought provoking and should be read by those in the mental health field, by those in law and by those faced with making the decision of commitment. And for those with a simple interest in what Thomas Szasz is trying to put forth, I can only suggest: take a deep breath, grab a dictionary and dig in.

WHITE MATES IN 3

Despite many rumors to the contrary, Boris Spassky, who for the time being at least is now residing in France, retains a close relationship with the USSR Chess Federation.

For example, for his recent candidate's match with Vlastimil Hort of Czechoslovakia, held in Reykjavik, Iceland, Spassky was provided with ex-world champion Vassily Smyslov as a second.

When this writer visited the headquarters of the Soviet federation in Moscow during the time that match (with the score tied) was interrupted by Spassky's attack of appendicitis, he witnessed several telephone conversations by concerned Soviet officials with Reykjavik about Spassky's condition and future match arrangements.

There was also a visibly strong regret that Spassky's illness would prevent him from playing on the Soviet team in the forthcoming European Team Championships.

A couple of weeks after an appendectomy was performed on Boris, the match was resumed. After a couple of draws, Spassky won the penultimate game and then drew the last game to win the match.

In the SOLVE-IT position from the decisive game, Hort, who was on the move, ran out of time and forfeited. But had he been able to continue, he could have forced an immediate win with 35... Bxb3; 36 Qxb3 Q-N51, threatening 37... QxP mate. Spassky's 37 R-B2 would then have lost to 37... R-Q8ch; 38 R-B1 RxQR; 39 RxR Q-Q8ch etc. Similarly if 37 P-N3, then 37... Stamp notes

On June 30, the Canada Post will release two 12-cent commemorative stamps — one marking the 25th anniversary of the first Canadian-born governor general of modern Canada and the other marking the 10th anniversary of the founding of the Order of Canada.

Both stamps were designed by Anthony Hobbs of Montreal and 18 million of each will be printed by Ashton-Potter of Toronto, in five color lithography and four-color lithography with embossing respectively.

The present Governor General, the Right Honourable Jules Leger, is only the fourth native-born person to hold the post and the new adhesive carries his name and the names of his three predecessors.

The governor general administers, under the Crown, a comprehensive system of Canadian honors including the Order of Canada which was instituted on July 1, 1967. Since that time, only about 1000 Canadians have satisfied the requirements which reflect the Order's motto "They desire a better country." The badge of the Order was designed by Bruce Beatty, based on a snowflake, and reflect the red and white of the Canadian flag.

The new stamps will be printed in panes of fifty and plate inscriptions bearing the designer's and printer's names will appear in the corners of each pane. The total production will be tagged.

Collectors desiring first day cancellations should send their requests to "FDC/Governor Generals Stamp" or to "FDC/Order of Canada Stamp" in care of the Philatelic Service, Canada Post, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada, K1A 0B5" enclosing the proper remittance which is the cost of the stamps to be affixed. Your remittance should be by international bank draft (in Canadian funds) payable to "The Governor General for Canada" and must include a 15-cent handling fee for each cover affixed with less than 50-cents postage.

The Northwest Stamp Club will hold its annual summer auction tomorrow, from 1-5 p.m. at the Arlington Heights Public Library, 500 N. Dunton Street. Visitors and guests are welcome to attend.

On June 1, 1977, the Canada Post withdrew from sale its Royal Military College Centenary stamp and the United States Bicentennial stamp. These stamps are now available only in the semi-annual packs of single stamps or in annual "souvenir Collections" of commemorative or special issue stamps.

The British Crown colonies of the Ellice Islands and the Gilbert Islands have become two separate Crown colonies.

The Ellice Islands (Nanumea, Nanumanga, Niutao, Niu, Vaitupu, Nukufetau, Funafuti, Nukulaelae and Niulakita) are now called Tuvalu and have set up a separate postal administration of their own. Customer deposit accounts are accepted and those who wish to investigate stamps issued by a 'new nation' should write to the "Tuvalu Philatelic Bureau, General Post Office, Funafuti, Tuvalu, Central Pacific."

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

by PETER J. SHAW

GLIMMEN, The Netherlands (UPI)—Dutch troops backed by Starfighter jets stormed a hijacked train and an elementary school to end the ordeal of 55 hostages who had been held by Moluccan gunmen for 20 days.

As the firing ceased, some of the hostages aboard the train were seen walking to waiting ambulances.

The attack began at dawn and heavy machine gun fire could be heard along with the boom of heavier weapons as the jets roared overhead.

THE ATTACK followed the breakdown of attempts by Moluccan mediators to negotiate a settlement with the gunmen who are seeking the independence of their island homeland from Indonesia and have demanded a getaway plane, and the release of 21 Moluccan prisoners.

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come from within the train. However, the four-coach express remained intact.

After about 10 minutes the action appeared to have died down. Reporters and photographers at other vantage points said the train seemed undamaged and they did not think there was any shooting inside the carriages.

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Last week and again Thursday, Dr. Tan and Mrs. Josina Soumokil, 64, widow of a slain Moluccan leader, boarded a hijacked train where 51 of the hostages were held in unsuccessful attempts to reach a settlement with the estimated 10 gunmen.

Relatives of the hostages pleaded to be consulted before authorities take any action that could result in death or injury. Their request was rejected.

The gunmen have demanded a getaway plane and the release of 21 Moluccans imprisoned for other terrorist actions in pursuit of independence for their island homeland in the Pacific, which is now part of Indonesia.

The plight of the hostages was underlined Thursday when one of them surreptitiously used a mirror to flash a Morse code message which said, "Get us out of here."

Deputy Health Minister Joseph Hendriks said he met with relatives of the hostages, who are not allowed to talk to reporters, and spoke to them "very openly" but refused to give details to reporters.

"Their impatience also is increasing and they are longing for the end," he said.

The reports of preparations for an attack sparked speculation they were meant to shake up the gunmen — which a Dutch spokesman denied, saying "anxious terrorists can be very, very dangerous." Supporters of the Moluccans also threatened to stage a wave of terrorist reprisals.

One mediator, Dr. Hassan Tan, 56, a Moluccan physician, said, "If there is one wrong word, emotions will erupt and then the most horrible things may happen."

Tan said, "Our attempt to build a bridge between the two parties has been a complete failure."

Ray escapes from prison

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI)—James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, broke out of the maximum security Brushy Mountain prison in a hall of gunfire Friday night, triggering a massive manhunt.

A spokesman in the governor's office at Nashville said Ray and six other men "went over the wall" at about 8 p.m. EDT.

"The escape occurred during the evening recreation period," according to Brooks Parker, a spokesman for Gov. Ray Blanton.

Ray's efforts for a new trial were rejected by one court after another, although there were many unexplained facets to the case such as where he got the money to flee to, and around, Europe after the killing.

Civic Center elevator has halting habit

by SCOTT FOSDICK

If you have an overwhelming fear of being stuck in a small, box-like room, don't use the elevators at the Des Plaines Civic Center, 1420 Miner St.

You can ride the elevator there one hundred times without any trouble. But that 101st trip just might be a zinger.

Ask Ald. Patrick Brannigan, 4th, or Ald. John E. Seitz, 7th. Or Ellis Perl, the assistant city engineer. All of them — and many more — have at one time or another found themselves marooned in the civic center elevators.

"WE'VE HAD MORE calls from the civic center than from all the rest of the elevators in the city combined," Fire Chief Don Corey says.

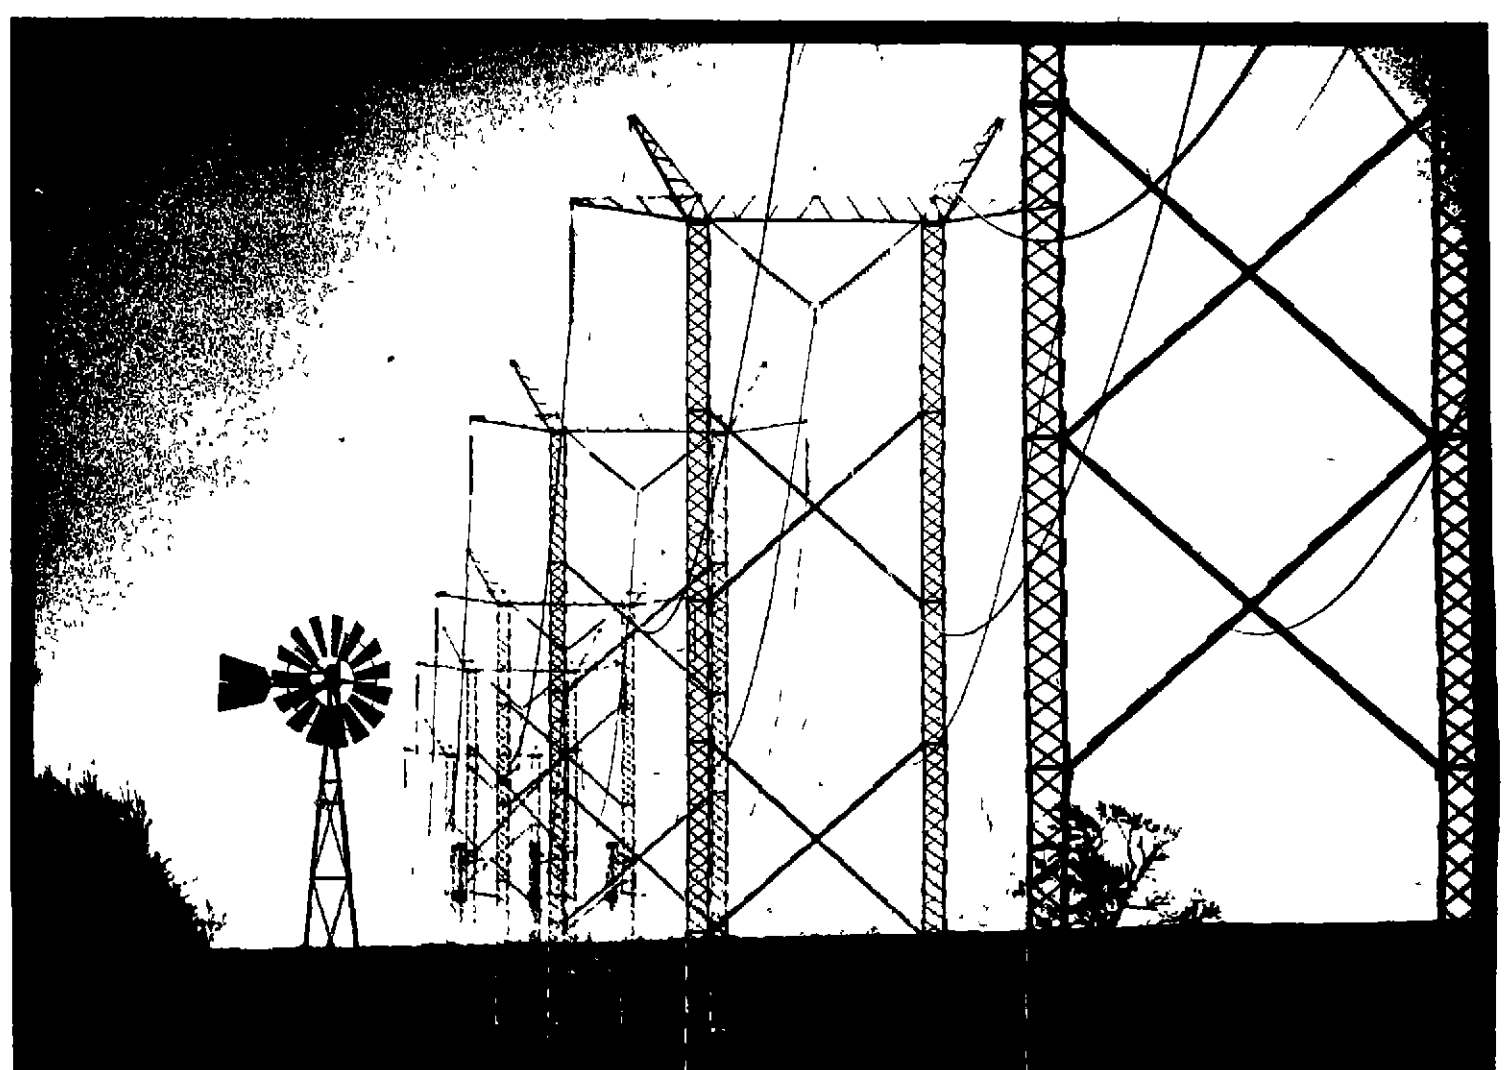

Getting caught in the civic center elevators may be a hassle, but it's not a disaster. Inside each of the two elevators is a special telephone, a hotline to the Des Plaines Fire Dept. When you get stuck, just pick up the phone and shout for help — it's bound to come pretty soon.

"It only takes us just a matter of minutes," Corey says. "They aren't in there at the most more than seven or ten minutes."

Usually the elevator gets stuck somewhere between floors. When the firefighters get there, they have a key to open the door just above or below where the elevator is stuck. Depending on where it stops, you have to climb, jump, or just walk out.

AND, IF YOU get scared, there's always a reassuring voice on the oth-

WINDMILLS WERE bringing power to the Midwest long before electrical power lines were installed. And before that they were used to pump water on farms. Today's wind generators are slimmer and many are mounted on rooftops. They aren't a common sight yet, but many people say the winds are one source of power that will have to be tapped.

Search for energy tilts to windmills

by LYNN ASINOF

A lot of people chuckled when Illinois Schools Supt. Joseph Cronin suggested that state schools might someday be powered by windmills.

But a visit to Plum Brook, Ohio would make the chucklers think twice. There stands the country's largest wind generator, with twin blades 125 feet across. It can produce 100 kilowatts of electricity when the wind blows at 18 miles per hour.

Built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation in 1975, the wind generator is considered a first step.

IT IS PART of the government's push to explore the use of large wind generators to produce low-cost electricity. The Energy Research and Development Administration estimates that wind will provide 1,000 megawatts of electricity by the year 1985, equivalent to 0.5 per cent of the nation's total projected energy needs.

In the next two years, the government will build four large machines. This year alone, it will spend $20.5 million on windpower research, and 30 per cent of that will be spent on large wind generators.

But most people probably will feel the effects of windpower from another direction — the small wind generators mounted on rooftops.

That's the approach taken by the 11th Street Movement in New York City, a low income neighborhood group that has rebuilt a burned-out tenement.

WITH A government grant, the group installed a $4,000 windmill that can produce 2,000 watts of electricity an hour. That's not enough to power the entire building, but it will produce enough to cut the electric bill for common areas of the building by one-third.

The 11th Street Movement bought a rebuilt Jacobs windmill from Windworks, a technological community 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. It is one big source of information on windpower systems.

Solar heat energy wave of the future

Solar energy is a boom business. Small companies have sprouted like weeds bearing names like Sunworks, Mr. Sun, Solar-Aire and Helio-Dynamics.

Many of the companies have put lots of research into their product, others are fly-by-nighters. But all are anxious to cash in on the new alternative energy campaign, and many are finding they can't handle all the business coming their way.

Just ask Stephen Miller, who founded Amcon Inc., a Carbondale firm that produces complete solar air systems. Just 1½-year-old, Amcon was started because Miller couldn't find the equipment he needed on the market.

"I WAS A contractor and we had some clients come in wanting to have a solar home built," Miller said. "We took a look at what was on the market. That was in 1973-74. Then we set about to design our own system."

Today Miller says he can't keep up with the business. "We're by no means set up to handle the influx of inquiries we have right now," he said, noting he's gotten letters from every state in the U.S., not to mention a string of foreign countries including Liberia, Germany and Israel.

The solar industry is doubling in size every nine months based on the amount of solar collector plates sold, said Sheldon Butt, president of the Solar Energy Industries Assn. But the industry is still in its infancy and Butt says there will be many changes before it stabilizes.

Right now, most solar industries are small businesses. Butt said that creates built-in problems since the companies often don't have needed organizational or marketing skills.

"LARGELY WHAT you find today is the founder of a company is a good technical man who sat down and designed himself a good product and now he doesn't know what to do with it," Butt said.

Although there is a tremendous market for solar products, often the solar companies have a hard time getting their product in the public eye. They don't have enough time to develop good public relations, and that is one reason why it is hard to get information on solar products.

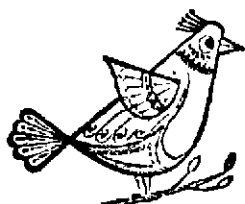

The Federal Energy Administration publishes a list of companies active in solar energy, but Butt points out that the FEA often has trouble finding the smaller companies.

N. Paul Sood is a resourceful, intelligent individual

by DEBBE JONAK

N. Paul Sood's argument for recycling resources is simple and to the point.

"Any other way is just so unintelligent," he said.

It's hard to argue with Sood, 34, of 9415 Bay Colony Dr., Des Plaines, about what is intelligent and what is not — the India-born immigrant has an I.Q. of 165 and is a member of Mensa, the elite, national club for the cream of the brain crop.

ABOUT 10 YEARS ago, before the energy crisis surfaced, he set his mind on one thing — promoting energy conservation and recycling.

"I started my first job in England in 1966. It was a firm which built nuclear reactors," he said. His experience there familiarized him with the energy scene.

"Since then I've had an interest not only in energy, but also resources. I believe the economy should be based on recycling resources," Sood said. "I think in the long-range, we will have to base it on recycling. Nature recycles everything. It's a better way of doing things."

Thirty years ago, Sood narrowly escaped death when his family fled civil war and chaos in India. Today he is preparing for his American citizenship and is vice-president of Rose and Co., a Northbrook consulting firm.

HE ADVISES area industries on how to recycle and conserve energy. He shows them how to take the wasted energy thrown out in the industrial production process and recycle it.

He also presents seminars on energy conservation. A free seminar is scheduled at 12:45 p.m. June 29 at the Sheraton North Shore Inn, Northbrook, at which he will talk about practical conservation measures for the businessman and homeowner.

But Sood has a couple of bigger pet projects that he dreams about and plans in his spare time.

One is mass recycling of aluminum beverage cans.

"When they first came out, I thought 'What a ridiculous idea.' Here's an aluminum can worth so much more than what's in it — Coke is basically water," he said. "Yet we consume the water and throw away the cans."

For that reason, recycling makes even more sense economically, Sood said. "There is enough aluminum in this country in waste that we don't really need to mine for it anymore."

Recycling human waste is another of his favorite projects — although he classifies it as still in dream stages. A community could recycle its waste and provide its food, he said.

THE WASTE would be transferred to enclosed greenhouses, where it would be mixed with the soil. Crops would grow quickly and could be harvested year-round, he said.

"Right now it is just daydreaming. I don't think the time is here yet," he said, although he believes the time inevitably will come. He is researching the idea and plans to prepare a paper on it.

The United States is one of the most wasteful countries in the world, he said. "Mainly because of the high level of industrial activity here . . . and America has historically had abundant supplies of resources as compared to other countries. So there hasn't been the conscientiousness in conserving."

Sood said he may be more aware of waste because he was raised in poor countries, although he said many Americans in his business are equally aware.

SOOD WAS BORN in Lahore, India in 1943. Four years later, the country divided into India and Pakistan. Civil war broke out, centering on who would claim his home province of Punjab.

"We were thrown into total disorder, chaos, after the split. We had a very good business, but we almost ran away naked from our home," he said.

When Pakistan took Lahore, his family decided to flee by train across the border to India. After missing two trains they and other families jumped into trucks and sped across the border.

"The last train we missed was stopped at the border and everybody was slaughtered," Sood said.

From India, his family emigrated to Kenya. Both his parents taught school there and he left in 1962 to study engineering in England. From there, he received job offers in Canada, then in the United States with Rose and Co.

Since then, he has returned to India once, to marry his wife, Lata. His parents had moved back to their native country and arranged the marriage, as is traditional there. His wedding day in 1973 was the first time Sood saw his wife.

"I FEEL IT WORKS just as fine that way," he said. "It is based on the assumption that your parents know you. They can be more objective. The friendship and love start after your marriage."

While Sood and his wife adhered to tradition in the marriage arrangement, their wedded life is much more contemporary.

"In my home as far as I'm concerned, she's my equal. Except on energy — she doesn't think I'm worth a damn," he said. He often leaves lights burning all over the house.

Dist. 26 wrapup

Park View tenants continue rentals

Two tenants will continue to rent space in 1977-78 at Park View School, 806 Burning Bush Ln., Mount Prospect.

The River Trails Dist. 26 Board of Education Tuesday approved renewing its leases with the Willows Foundation, operator of Northridge Preparatory School, and a Montessori School. Total rental revenue for 1977-78 will be $35,536.92, Board Pres. Leora Rosen said.

In 1976-77, the district also leased space to the East Maine Christian Academy based in Glenview. Mrs. Rosen said the academy is discontinuing operation in the area.

Both tenants will rent additional space next year, Mrs. Rosen said. The extra rented space plus a 5 per cent increase in the rental rate means the district will receive more revenue, she said.

In 1976-77, Dist. 26 received $26,794 from its three Park View tenants.

Dist. 26 closed Park View a year ago because of declining enrollment and continuing financial troubles.

District officials said renting the building absorbs the cost of heating and custodial services for the district's administration center, which is attached to Park View.

Learning aide hiring OK'd

The board approved the hiring of one learning center aide, a noncertified position, at each of the district's five schools.

Total cost for the project is expected to be about $7,800. Full-time aides will work four hours per day from September through May.

Each building has one learning center teacher, a certified position, but that person's clerical duties often cut into the time he or she could be working with children in educational areas, district officials have said.

Hiring aides, at hourly rates of from $3 to $7.75 per hour, will help provide more time for the learning center teachers to work with students.

The board agreed to place full-time aides at River Trails Junior High School and at Euclid and Indian Grove schools. Bond and Feehanville schools will have half-time aides.

Consolidation talks take new course in Dist. 26

by HOLLY HANSON

Talk of consolidation in River Trails Dist. 26 is taking a new direction as officials attempt to determine whether a merger with a nearby district is a desirable way to balance the budget.

Board of education members no longer can "talk in generalities" about merging, board member Sylvia Lurie said recently. Specific information on what consolidation would mean to Dist. 26 is a necessity now, she said.

The board's consolidation committee has directed administrators to study the educational and financial effects of consolidation on other districts that have merged to cut costs.

COMMITTEE MEMBERS also will review the programs and financial situations of Dist. 26's neighbors, to see whether those districts are interested in merging and if their programs and finances are compatible with those in Dist. 26.

Mount Prospect Dist. 57, which is similar in size to Dist. 26 but is in a more stable financial condition, has been mentioned by district officials as the most likely merger candidate.

Dist. 57 formed a committee last fall to study consolidation with Dist. 26, but Dist. 26 took no action.

Prospect Heights Dist. 23, another small neighboring district, has expressed no interest in consolidation.

THE MARCH failure of a tax increase referendum that Dist. 26 officials said would have provided enough revenue to maintain current programs through 1980 has given new impetus to consolidation.

Dist. 26 Supt. John Fridlund, in what is seen as a step toward consolidation with Dist. 57, recently recommended that Dist. 26 hold another tax increase referendum to increase taxes slightly to the level in Dist. 57.

Although increased state aid and budget cuts have brightened the district's financial picture somewhat, officials still predict deficits of about $1 million for 1978-79 and 1979-80.

Mrs. Lurie, who chairs the district's consolidation committee, Tuesday told the board it should consider what type of educational program it wants to provide and how much that program costs.

WHEN THIS has been determined, she said, the board should compute what its revenues and enrollment will be over the next five years to see how much of the "ideal" program is affordable.

"We have to get a fix on what we want to provide," Mrs. Lurie said. "Is that what we have now, more than we have now, or something different?"

er end of the line to keep you from climbing the walls of your temporary cell.

"Some people really get a phobia to it, being shut in closed spaces. I know some people will walk flights of stairs to avoid taking the elevator," Corey says.

Why should elevators in a building that's just over 2 years old break down so often?

Joseph Schwab, public works commissioner, blames it on the complicated circuitry.

Some speculate it's because the elevators are serviced by a different company than the one that originally installed them.

The two Dover elevators were installed by the Gregory Elevator Service Co. of Chicago. City Clerk Eleanor Rohrbach says that company might be able to keep the elevators running more regularly than they are now.

The Mid-States Elevator Service Co., Chicago, got the maintenance contract from the city council two years ago, because it offered to do the work cheaper than Gregory.

But the maintenance contract came up for renewal this week, and the civic center's elevator woes may soon be over.

This year, the Gregory company was the low bidder. So the council gave Gregory the elevator contract — and gave Mid-States the shaft.

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

by PETER J. SHAW

GLIMMEN, The Netherlands (UPI)—Dutch troops backed by Starfighter jets stormed a hijacked train and an elementary school to end the ordeal of 55 hostages who had been held by Moluccan gunmen for 20 days.

As the firing ceased, some of the hostages aboard the train were seen walking to waiting ambulances.

The attack began at dawn and heavy machine gun fire could be heard along with the boom of heavier weapons as the jets roared overhead.

THE ATTACK followed the breakdown of attempts by Moluccan mediators to negotiate a settlement with the gunmen who are seeking the independence of their island homeland from Indonesia and have demanded a getaway plane, and the release of 21 Moluccan prisoners.

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come from within the train. However, the four-coach express remained intact.

There were no immediate reports of casualties but stretchers were taken directly to the train.

The use of jets and mortars with what seemed to be blank ammunition apparently was meant to intimidate and confuse the gunmen. At least six F104 Starfighter jets crisscrossed above the train at a height of no more than 50 feet, their afterburners glowing red in the deep blue morning light.

The first plane streaked straight down the tracks toward the train and barely cleared the roof.

THE ASSAULT came as a complete surprise. There had been heavy military movement during the night, but this died down as dawn approached, and no one expected an attack once it was already getting light.

Marines with blackened faces appeared out of the dense mist rolling across the flat pastureland to launch the assault.

There was heavy machinegun fire, then the planes appeared and a series of booms was heard.

After a short lull, three bright flashes were seen inside the train but there was no sound. The only sign of damage to the train seemed to be broken windows.

Less than an hour after the attack, streams of ambulances began ferrying survivors to a special medical reception post at the Academic Hospital at Groningen. They traveled a long road cleared of all traffic.

At the school, at least four armored cars were engaged in the assault and automatic weapons fire was heard. Marines were later seen at the school raising their fists in a gesture of victory and shouting, "Hurray, hurray."

After about 10 minutes the action appeared to have died down. Reporters and photographers at other vantage points said the train seemed undamaged and they did not think there was any shooting inside the carriages.

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Ray escapes from prison

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI)—James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, broke out of the maximum security Brushy Mountain prison in a hall of gunfire Friday night, triggering a massive manhunt.

Downtown tax district may pay for upgrade

Merchants and businessmen in Wheeling's central business district may find themselves in a special taxing district to finance redevelopment of the downtown area.

A special assessment district for downtown redevelopment is one of several financial alternatives cited in a downtown improvement study recently completed by David R. Outthred, village planning consultant. The study will be reviewed with merchants and residents in a series of public hearings to be scheduled.

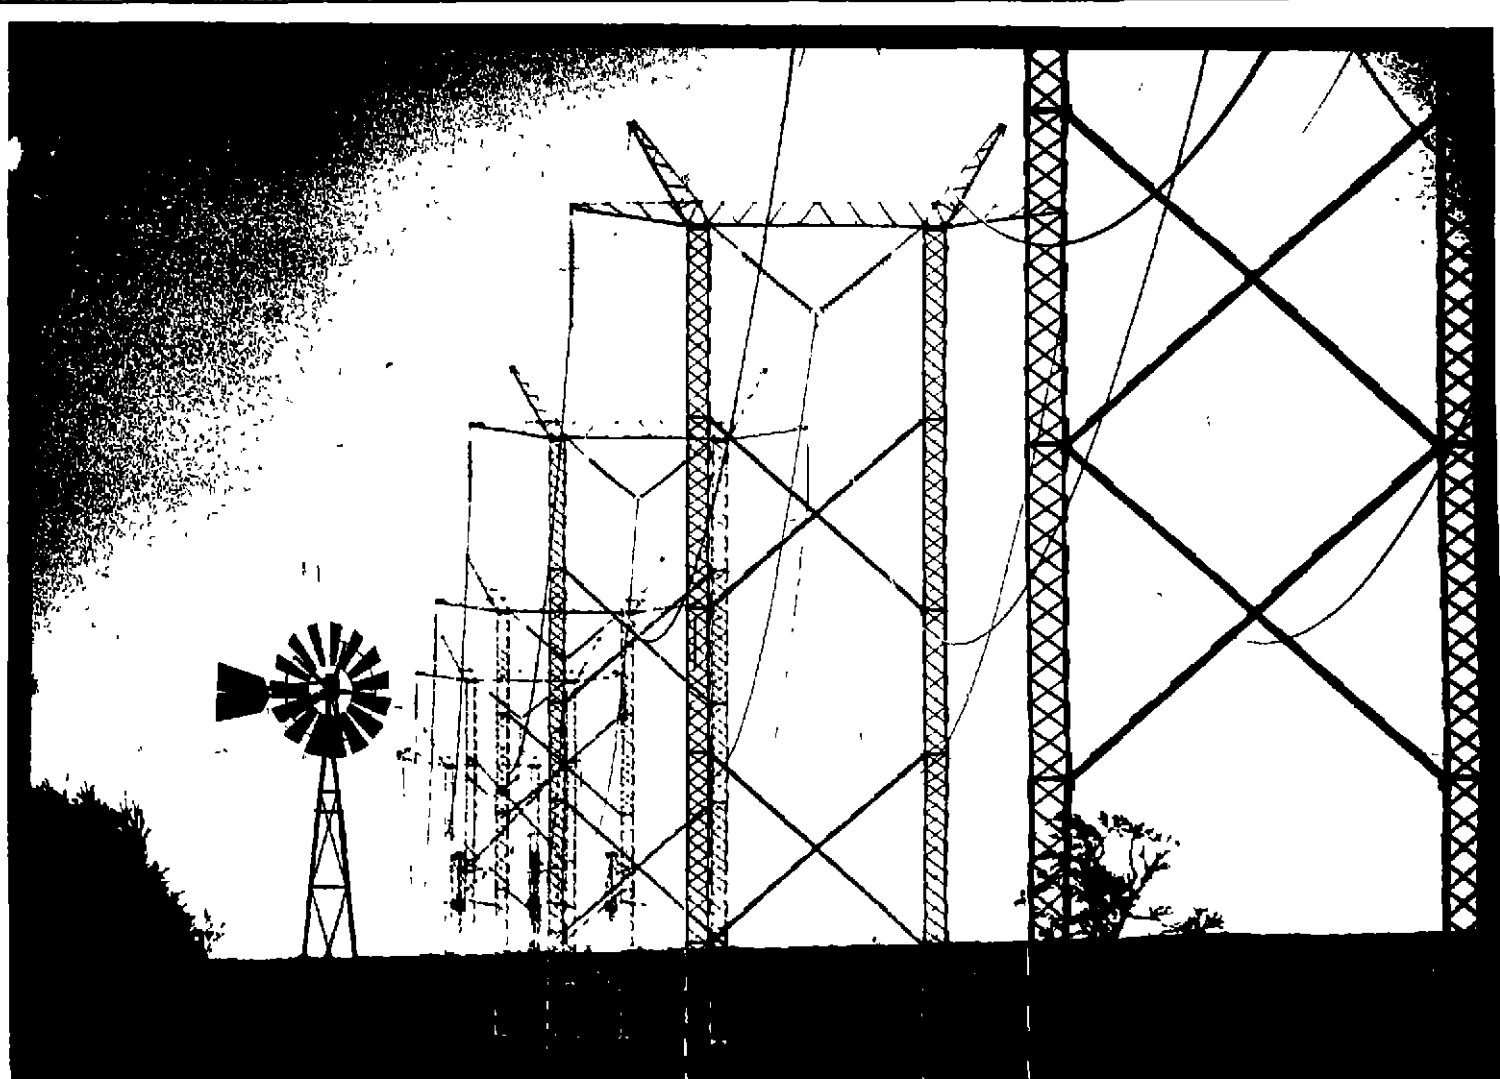

Outthred said the special assessment district is the "most commonly used method of financing downtown improvements."

"In this system, part or all of the cost of an improvement, such as a public parking lot or a beautification project, is assessed against businesses that benefit from the improvement. The amount each business pays is calculated according to a complicated formula based on size of property, type of business, or distance from the improvement," he said.

OTHER FINANCING alternatives for downtown redevelopment include issuance of municipal bonds, tax increment financing, municipal taxes, general revenue sharing, state grants and federal grants. The method of financing will be discussed at the public hearings.

Outthred said a traffic study should be part of any program to improve the Milwaukee Avenue-Dundee Road business area. He said improvements to the road layout of the village could take some of the traffic burden from

This morning in The Herald

IF YOU JUST want to "hole-up" on your vacation this year, Travel takes you to just the place. Jackson Hole, Wyo., is a green saucer of land in the Grand Teton mountains that is secluded from the rest of the world. Legend has it that a man by the name of Davey Jackson was one of the first fur trappers to winter there. Now, outdoors enthusiasts drink in its beauty in any season.

THREE CRIMINOLOGISTS testified Friday in the Patricia Columbo-Frank DeLuca murder trial in an attempt by prosecutors to link physical evidence in the murders to the couple. One witness testified that a strand of hair found on Michael Columbo's body was "99.9 per cent" similar to Miss Columbo's. — Page 3.

MINICOMPUTERS and microprocessors are the latest step in advanced electrical technology and sales of microprocessor systems in 1977 could run as high as $300 million. Kits that can be assembled by hobbyists sell for less than $1,000 and have a wide variety of everyday uses. — Sect. 4, Page 1.

SHOWERS AND thunderstorms will visit the area today and temperatures will reach the lower 80s. The rain will move away later in the evening, bringing partly cloudy skies and clearing the way for a super Sunday with temperatures reaching the middle 70s. — Page 2.

Hein, two others, tardy with disclosure statements

Wheeling Village Pres. William Hein and two trustees who campaigned on a platform of open and honest government failed to file disclosure statements within the time period prescribed by the village ethics ordinance.

Hein and Trustees Robert Ross and Roger Powers filed their statements with the village clerk's office on June 6, nine days after the May 28 deadline set by village ordinance. Ross and Powers filed incomplete statements, omitting information concerning personal finances.

All other board members filed completed ethics statements by the deadline.

HEIN AND ROSS also noted in their statements that they did not understand the provisions of the ethics ordinance, which calls for disclosure of major debts and property ownership. Ross wrote on the statement that he was signing "under protest."

Hein said he forgot the May 28 deadline for filing the disclosure statement.

"I'm lucky my secretary reminded me. I understand quite a few people haven't gotten their statements in yet," he said.

Ross and Rogers also said they forgot the deadline for submitting the disclosure statement to the village clerk.

"I COMPLETELY forgot it until I got (Village Clerk) Alberta's (Klocke) memo. I thought I had filed it," Ross said.

Mrs. Klocke last week sent letters to village officials and employees who had failed to file disclosure statements. She said all statements must be in by June 6 or the village board would be notified of those failing to comply.

Powers said he had prepared his disclosure statement before the May 28 deadline and "laid it aside."

"When I received the letter giving the June 6 due date, I walked it right over to the village hall," he said.

BOTH ROSS AND Powers filed incomplete information in the section of the disclosure statement concerning outstanding debts. The ethics code asks that any debt exceeding $5,000 or 25 per cent of yearly income be listed, including the amount of the loan and the lender. Listing mortgages on current residences is not required by the law.

Powers said he has a loan against a house at 1509 Clearwater Ln. from the Old Orchard Bank and Trust Co., Skokie, but failed to list the amount. Powers Friday said he did not know the amount was required by ordinance. He said the loan is in the "area of $30,000." He is in the process of selling the house.

Ross listed a loan against a house in Wis., but failed to give the amount or the lender. He said he doesn't feel the ordinance requires such information.

All three men have supported changes in the ethics ordinance which would limit disclosure to dealings within the village or a 10-mile limit of the village. All three said they feel the current ordinance approved by the previous board in February is too vague. They have proposed revisions to the ordinance to clear up what they consider ambiguities.

Trustee John Cole has criticized the proposed changes as "cutting the guts" out of the ethics code. The board will vote on the amendments at the June 20 meeting.

The ethics code provides for a fine of up to $500 for failing to file or for knowingly filing a false or incomplete statement.

Tax district may pay for upgrade

the two major thoroughfares. "Much of the land in the village hall area is relatively undeveloped. Some new roads would open some of this land up for redevelopment. Similarly, the rear portions of some of the deep lots along Milwaukee would benefit from greater access," Outthred said. The village also should study the feasibility of a riverfront road in the central area "to open up the (Des Plaines) riverfront to the public as well as serving as a bypass of the Dundee-Milwaukee intersection," he said.

Other improvements suggested in the study include:

- Revision of zoning ordinances to encourage development in the downtown area.

- Negotiating with the state to acquire Milwaukee Avenue.

- Developing areas along the Des Plaines River.

Clarification

Two High School Dist. 214 valedictorians inadvertently were excluded from a list of valedictorians published in The Herald. Thomas Paul Stahnke, 3511 Mallard Cr., Rolling Meadows, is one of nine valedictorians at Rolling Meadows High School. Cindy Troiano, 1092 Crimson Dr., Wheeling, is among six valedictorians at Wheeling High School.

- Development of a senior citizens' housing program.
- Increasing bus service to residential areas, especially senior citizens housing.
- Development of a promotional program to attract additional business.

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

by PETER J. SHAW

GLIMMEN, The Netherlands (UPI)—Dutch troops backed by Starfighter jets stormed a hijacked train and an elementary school to end the ordeal of 55 hostages who had been held by Moluccan gunmen for 20 days.

As the firing ceased, some of the hostages aboard the train were seen walking to waiting ambulances.

The attack began at dawn and heavy machine gun fire could be heard along with the boom of heavier weapons as the jets roared overhead.

THE ATTACK followed the breakdown of attempts by Moluccan mediators to negotiate a settlement with the gunmen who are seeking the independence of their island homeland from Indonesia and have demanded a getaway plane, and the release of 21 Moluccan prisoners.

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come from within the train. However, the four-coach express remained intact.

There were no immediate reports of casualties but stretchers were taken directly to the train.

The use of jets and mortars with what seemed to be blank ammunition apparently was meant to intimidate and confuse the gunmen. At least six F104 Starfighter jets crisscrossed above the train at a height of no more than 50 feet, their afterburners glowing red in the deep blue morning light.

The first plane streaked straight down the tracks toward the train and barely cleared the roof.

THE ASSAULT came as a complete surprise. There had been heavy military movement during the night but this died down as dawn approached, and no one expected an attack once it was already getting light.

Marines with blackened faces appeared out of the dense mist rolling across the flat pastureland to launch the assault.

There was heavy machinegun fire, then the planes appeared and a series of booms was heard.

After a short lull, three bright flashes were seen inside the train but there was no sound. The only sign of damage to the train seemed to be broken windows.

Less than an hour after the attack, streams of ambulances began ferrying survivors to a special medical reception post at the Academic Hospital at Groningen. They traveled a long road cleared of all traffic.

At the school, at least four armored cars were engaged in the assault and automatic weapons fire was heard. Marines were later seen at the school raising their fists in a gesture of victory and shouting, "Hurray, hurray."

After about 10 minutes the action appeared to have died down. Reporters and photographers at other vantage points said the train seemed undamaged and they did not think there was any shooting inside the carriages.

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Ray escapes from prison

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI)—James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, broke out of the maximum security Brushy Mountain prison in a hall of gunfire Friday night, triggering a massive manhunt.

A spokesman in the governor's office at Nashville said Ray and six other men "went over the wall" at about 8 p.m. EDT.

"The escape occurred during the evening recreation period," according to Brooks Parker, a spokesman for Gov. Ray Blanton.

"THE PRISONERS escaped using a homemade ladder made out of lightning conduit (wire). One has been captured and there are still six at large. One of them is James Earl Ray."

The one recaptured was injured as he went over the wall. Bank robber Jerry Ward was shot by guards and taken to Oak Ridge Hospital.

FBI agents, not waiting for an invitation, rushed to the fortress-like prison buried in the Tennessee mountains 40 miles northeast of Knoxville near Oak Ridge.

"Warden Davis informs me that the search underway is made up of 125 correctional officers, 10 highway patrolmen, two FBI men on the scene, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation agents and local law enforcement officers from Morgan County," said Parker.

"AT THE PRESENT time, prison bloodhounds are in pursuit of three of the six escapees. The warden is having a standby team of dogs brought in."

King was felled by a single shot as he stood on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn., on the evening of April 4, 1968.

An intensive manhunt soon focused on Ray, then a fugitive from the Missouri State Prison. He was arrested at London's Heathrow Airport on June 5.

On March 10, 1969, after shuffling through several attorneys and winding up with noted defense lawyer Percy Foreman, Ray entered a guilty plea and was sentenced to 99 years. There was no testimony.

Almost from the moment he entered prison, Ray began protesting his conviction, saying his attorneys railroaded him. He claimed he was working for a man named "Raoul," who he thought was a gunman, and had been set up to take the blame for the killing.

The government claimed he killed King with a rifle aimed through the bathroom window of a flophouse. The rifle was found in a bag by the door of the building.

Ray's efforts for a new trial were rejected by one court after another, although there were many unexplained facets to the case such as where he got the money to flee to, and around, Europe after the killing.

Township to finance home, seeks voice

Vernon Township will financially support Winchester House, Lake County's public nursing home, but township officials want more of a role in the way the home is run.

William Peterson, Vernon Township supervisor, said the township would pay about $2,400 per month to the home based on past experience.

"We definitely want the home to continue services, and we have set aside money in a special account since we stopped paying the differential last year," Peterson said. The account contained $10,000 at the start of this fiscal year, according to Peterson.

Prior to last year, the county's townships paid the difference between what the Illinois Dept. of Public Aid paid for Medicaid patients and actual costs per patient at Winchester House.

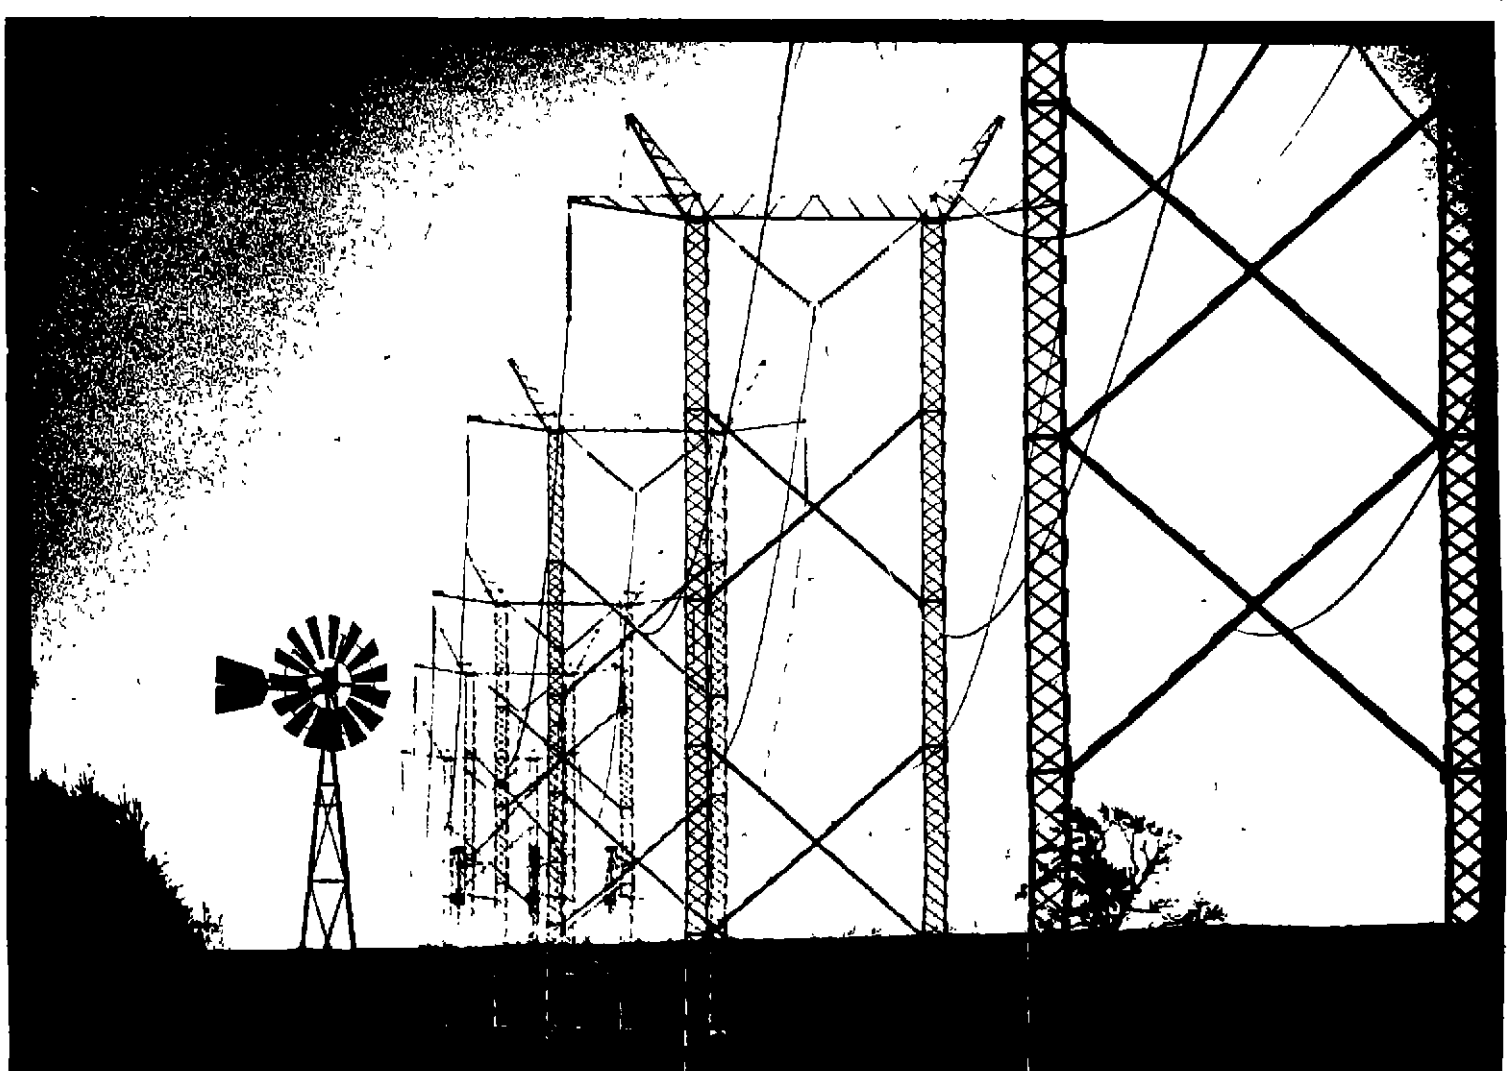

Last year a U. S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare regulation, which prevented the payments, came to light and the townships stopped the payments.

Negotiations between HEW and the Lake County State's Attorney's Office have resulted in a change in the regulation, which will allow the townships to subsidize the home.

Peterson said that township trustees expressed concern at Thursday's township meeting over their lack of input in the way the home is run.

"Some feel the county home is already better staffed than many private homes. Some of the other township supervisors feel the place is too well equipped," he said.

"There has to be some avenue of communication — more than there is now," Peterson said.

WINDMILLS WERE bringing power to the Midwest long before electrical power lines were installed. And before that they were used to pump water on farms. Today's wind generators are slimmer and many are mounted on rooftops. They aren't a common sight yet, but many people say the winds are one source of power that will have to be tapped.

Search for energy tilts to windmills

by LYNN ASINOF

A lot of people chuckled when Illinois Schools Supt. Joseph Cronin suggested that state schools might someday be powered by windmills.

But a visit to Plum Brook, Ohio would make the chucklers think twice. There stands the country's largest wind generator, with twin blades 125 feet across. It can produce 100 kilowatts of electricity when the wind blows at 18 miles per hour.

Built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation in 1975, the wind generator is considered a first step.

IT IS PART of the government's push to explore the use of large wind generators to produce low-cost electricity. The Energy Research and Development Administration estimates that wind will provide 1,000 megawatts of electricity by the year 1985, equivalent to 0.5 per cent of the nation's total projected energy needs.

In the next two years, the government will build four large machines. This year alone, it will spend $20.5 million on windpower research, and 30 per cent of that will be spent on large wind generators.

But most people probably will feel the effects of windpower from another direction — the small wind generators mounted on rooftops.

That's the approach taken by the 11th Street Movement in New York City, a low income neighborhood group that has rebuilt a burned-out tenement.

WITH A government grant, the group installed a $4,000 windmill that can produce 2,000 watts of electricity an hour. That's not enough to power the entire building, but it will produce enough to cut the electric bill for common areas of the building by one-third.

The 11th Street Movement bought a rebuilt Jacobs windmill from Windworks, a technological community 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. It is one big source of information on windpower systems.

Started in 1970 under the direction and sponsorship of R. Buckminster Fuller, Windworks began experimenting with simple wind machines for the homebuilder.

"The homebuilding approach was fine as an educational tool, (Continued in Section 2, on Page 6)

Solar heat energy wave of the future

Solar energy is a boom business. Small companies have sprouted like weeds bearing names like Sunworks, Mr. Sun, Solar-Aire and Helio-Dynamics.

Many of the companies have put lots of research into their product, others are fly-by-nighters. But all are anxious to cash in on the new alternative energy campaign, and many are finding they can't handle all the business coming their way.

Just ask Stephen Miller, who founded Amcon Inc., a Carbondale firm that produces complete solar air systems. Just 1½-year-old, Amcon was started because Miller couldn't find the equipment he needed on the market.

"I WAS A contractor and we had some clients come in wanting to have a solar home built," Miller said. "We took a look at what was on the market. That was in 1973-74. Then we set about to design our own system."

Today Miller says he can't keep up with the business. "We're by no means set up to handle the influx of inquiries we have right now," he said, noting he's gotten letters from every state in the U.S., not to mention a string of foreign countries including Liberia, Germany and Israel.

The solar industry is doubling in size every nine months based on the amount of solar collector plates sold, said Sheldon Butt, president of the Solar Energy Industries Assn. But the industry is still in its infancy and Butt says there will be many changes before it stabilizes.

Right now, most solar industries are small businesses. Butt said that creates built-in problems since the companies often don't have needed organizational or marketing skills.

"LARGELY WHAT you find today is the founder of a company is a good technical man who sat down and designed himself a good product and now he doesn't know what to do with it," Butt said.

Although there is a tremendous market for solar products, often the solar companies have a hard time getting their product in the public eye. They don't have enough time to develop good public relations, and that is one reason why it is hard to get information on solar products.

The Federal Energy Administration publishes a list of companies active in solar energy, but Butt points out that the FEA often has trouble finding the smaller companies.

Judge Sirica orders Gould to pay itself $200,000

by ROBERT KYLE

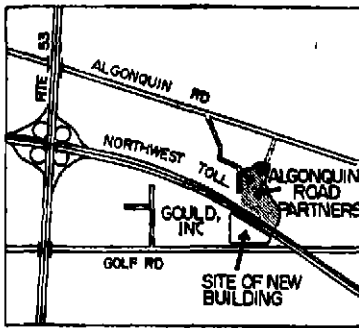

It began more than two years ago with a corporate decision to expand.

It ended this week in a Washington, D.C., courtroom when U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica ordered top officials of Gould Inc., to sell a 32-acre tract in Rolling Meadows and to pay at least $200,000 to their own company, even if it means taking money from their own pockets.

Along the way came a complex real estate deal where four Gould officials, their attorney and their real estate agent used a "straw person" to inflate the price of a piece of land sold to the company while reducing the price of a tract they bought for themselves.

THE GOULD OFFICIALS are not saying much about Sirica's order or the Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of the transaction. One principal, Gould Chairman William T. Ylvisaker, issued a statement saying he agreed to the settlement without admitting any violations of the law and only to avoid "time-consuming, expensive litigation and delay."

From the company's headquarters

in Rolling Meadows, publicist Marianna Durk said there will be no discipline for the employees involved in the transaction.

"They didn't do anything wrong," she said. "The only thing was the failure to disclose."

The SEC also aimed its complaint against the failure of Ylvisaker and Gould financial vice president Edwin C. Parker to tell the company's board of directors about their dealings. The agency's complaint simply outlines the facts of the land deals, facts, an attorney says, that will never be tested in court.

The SEC paints this picture: In January 1975 Ylvisaker instructed Illinois Development Corp., Gould's real estate agent, to negotiate for a seven-acre triangle on the south side of the Northwest Tollway at Golf Road. The triangle was part of a 39-acre tract — the rest lies north of the tollway.

IDC OFFERED $280,000 at first, then $300,000, then $325,000 and finally $350,000, the price determined by an appraiser hired by the owners.

The owners were ready to accept that price only if Gould provided access to the lanlocked 32-acre parcel north of the tollway. Negotiations came to an impasse over the question of access in September 1975.

In December IDC told Gould that the easiest way to acquire the seven-acre triangle was to buy the entire 39 acres for $1.4 million. IDC then recommended that Gould sell the property north of the tollway to finance the entire deal.

William D. Sanders, IDC president, told Ylvisaker in January that the land was worth more than $1.4 million. Sometime around the first of March, Sanders and Ylvisaker began talking about buying the 32-acre tract as an investment of their own.

IDC THEN AGREED to buy the entire 39-acre tract through a "straw person" who was to divide the land between Gould and a newly formed group called the "Algonquin Road Partners" — Ylvisaker, financial vice president Parker, Gould president Daniel Carroll, another unidentified Gould officer, attorney Thomas A. Reynolds Jr. and seven IDC employees.

The SEC does not know it, but the new partnership jelled at about the same time that the City of Rolling Meadows, at IDC's urging, solved the problem of access to the 32-acre tract.

It was in December 1975 or January 1976 that IDC first approached the city about using a city-owned easement running south from Algonquin Road, recalls City Engineer James J. Muldowney. In April, the city council agreed to build a street and a bridge if the developer paid the $185,000 cost. The SEC does know that the deal began to fall into place in May when a bank approved "more than 100 per cent financing" for the land.

GOULD ENDED UP paying $940,000 for the seven-acre triangle that had been appraised at $350,000. Instead of the appraised price of $1 million, the new partnership paid $460,000 for its 32 acres.

Immediately, the partnership put that parcel on the market for three times the purchase price.

In July, the SEC says, Gould's planning manager, Jack E. Jackson, voiced his concern that the firm may have paid too much for its land. For the second time, Gould president Carroll urged that Ylvisaker explain the transaction to Gould's directors.

The directors did not learn of the transaction, though, until August when Ylvisaker sent them a "misleading" letter that said the partnership had paid the appraised price for its land.

THE SEC'S LAST entry is dated Oct. 15, 1976: the Algonquin Road Partners offered to sell the land to Gould's directors for $460,000. At the same time, Ylvisaker, in his capacity as chairman and chief executive officer, recommended that the offer be refused.

Mrs. Durk and planning manager Jackson said the SEC complaint will have no impact on the firm's plans to build a new 10-story building near the tollway.

The future of the 32-acre parcel is not as clear. IDC originally had talked about hiring a large corporation to the site. City Engineer Muldowney says he's seen plans for a residential subdivision.

But, in addition to extracting a promise that Gould, Ylvisaker and financial vice president Parker will adhere to the SEC's disclosure regulations, Sirica's order says that the Algonquin Road Partners must sell their land.

Gould is to receive at least $200,000 of the proceeds, the agreement says, even if that means a loss for the partnership. If the land is sold at a profit, all of the profit must go to Gould. According to the agreement the partnership is to receive no more than the $460,000 they paid for the land.

League will study village's master plan

A study of Buffalo Grove's master plan is being undertaken by the League of Women Voters.

League members will look at questions of future village expansion, transportation needs, open space, water supply and fire protection. The study is scheduled to take 10 months.

"There is a feeling Buffalo Grove is still in its growing stages. It has a lot of decisions to make. We really would like to see what the master plan is saying," said Marsha Hirshberg, president of the League's Arlington Heights, Mount Prospect, Buffalo Grove chapter which is conducting the study.

THE LEAGUE will examine village growth information, study master plans from neighboring communities and talk to village officials, Mrs.

Hirshberg said.

"We may find more things that we want to get into," she said.

"We will eventually touch base with everyone for our research," said Bobbie O'Reilly, a league member involved in the project.

Village trustees have said it is time for the village to review and update the master plan, formulated in 1972, to spell out village growth goals.

The League's study will allow it to make a contribution to any village review of the plan, Mrs. O'Reilly said.

"We hope we could have some kind of impact when they (trustees) are working on their updating. Most of what the League does is educational," she said.

Other League chapters have undertaken similar studies, Mrs. Hirshberg said.

Volunteers are still needed for the project. Men as well as women are welcome, Mrs. O'Reilly said.

"Any man who can live with the title League of Women Voters is fine," she said.

Buffalo Grove Cook County residents wishing to volunteer should call 541-0993. Lake County residents should call 634-0796.

So goes the Des Plaines elevator

Up and down and up and oops!

by SCOTT FOSDICK

If you have an overwhelming fear of being stuck in a small, box-like room, don't use the elevators at the Des Plaines Civic Center, 1420 Miner St.

You can ride the elevator there one hundred times without any trouble. But that 101st trip just might be a zinger.

Ask Ald. Patrick Brannigan, 4th, or Ald. John E. Seitz, 7th. Or Ellis Perl, the assistant city engineer. All of them — and many more — have at one time or another found themselves marooned in the civic center elevators.

"WE'VE HAD MORE calls from the civic center than from all the rest of the elevators in the city combined," Fire Chief Don Corey says.

Getting caught in the civic center elevators may be a hassle, but it's not a disaster. Inside each of the two elevators is a special telephone, a hotline to the Des Plaines Fire Dept. When you get stuck, just pick up the phone and shout for help — it's bound to come pretty soon.

"It only takes us just a matter of minutes," Corey says. "They aren't in there at the most more than seven or ten minutes."

Usually the elevator gets stuck somewhere between floors. When the firefighters get there, they have a key to open the door just above or below where the elevator is stuck. Depending on where it stops, you have to climb, jump, or just walk out.

AND, IF YOU get scared, there's always a reassuring voice on the other end of the line to keep you from climbing the walls of your temporary cell.

"Some people really get a phobia to it, being shut in closed spaces. I know some people will walk flights of stairs to avoid taking the elevator," Corey says.

Why should elevators in a building that's just over 2 years old break down so often?

Joseph Schwab, public works commissioner, blames it on the complicated circuitry.

Some speculate it's because the elevators are serviced by a different company than the one that originally installed them.

The two Dover elevators were installed by the Gregory Elevator Service Co. of Chicago. City Clerk Eleanor Rohrbach says that company might be able to keep the elevators running more regularly than they are now.

The Mid-States Elevator Service Co., Chicago, got the maintenance contract from the city council two years ago, because it offered to do the work cheaper than Gregory,

But the maintenance contract came up for renewal this week, and the civic center's elevator woes may soon be over.

This year, the Gregory company was the low bidder. So the council gave Gregory the elevator contract — and gave Mid-States the shaft.

Construction firm donates dirt for Twin Groves site

The Buffalo Grove Park District will begin filling in the Twin Groves Park site with dirt next week but plans for tennis courts and baseball backstops will have to wait, Park Comr. William O'Reilly said this week.

The 600 cubic yards of landfill is being donated by Fragman Construction Co. which is doing work at the Plaza Verde Shopping Center, Arlington Heights and Dundee roads.

"We have the dirt, now we have to get it to the site," O'Reilly said. One park district truck will be used to get the dirt to the park site located between Penny Lane, Aspen Drive, Ivy Hall Lane and Clohesy Drive, along with village and Vernon Township trucks.

The district hopes to have equipment donated to grade and prepare the site for topsoil.

Plans for the four-acre park call for tennis courts, a tot lot and baseball fields.

O'Reilly said tennis courts and baseball backstops probably will not be installed this year.

Officials say there is no money available in the 1977-78 budget, which projects an $18,000 deficit.

Development plans for the site were decided this spring by park district officials, local residents and representatives of Twin Groves School, which is adjacent to the park site.

The park site has been undeveloped for five years, prompting complaints from residents of the area.

"It seems like the handwagon is finally rolling," O'Reilly said.

Amvets hosting Flag Day event

A Flag Day competition designed to encourage people to fly the American flag is being sponsored Tuesday by the Buffalo Grove Amvets.

The block which displays the most flags will receive a $25 prize which can be put toward a block project or donated to a charity, Tom Fitzgerald of the Amvets said.

A $15 second prize and $10 third prize will be awarded, Fitzgerald said. "There's a lot of people who don't even bother to fly the flag anymore. Those that have them should fly them," he said.

People wishing to participate in the contest should contact Fitzgerald Tuesday, Flag Day, at 537-6765. Fitzgerald will visit each block to verify the number of flags and determine the winner.

Great things are happening this weekend!

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

by PETER J. SHAW

GLIMMEN, The Netherlands (UPI) — Dutch troops backed by Starfighter jets stormed a hijacked train and an elementary school to end the ordeal of 55 hostages who had been held by Moluccan gunmen for 20 days.

As the firing ceased, some of the hostages aboard the train were seen walking to waiting ambulances.

The attack began at dawn and heavy machine gun fire could be heard along with the boom of heavier weapons as the jets roared overhead.

THE ATTACK followed the breakdown of attempts by Moluccan mediators to negotiate a settlement with the gunmen who are seeking the independence of their island homeland from Indonesia and have demanded a getaway plane, and the release of 21 Moluccan prisoners.

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come from within the train. However, the four-coach express remained intact.

There were no immediate reports of casualties but stretchers were taken directly to the train.

The use of jets and mortars with what seemed to be blank ammunition apparently was meant to intimidate and confuse the gunmen. At least six F104 Starfighter jets crisscrossed above the train at a height of no more than 50 feet, their afterburners glowing red in the deep blue morning light.

The first plane streaked straight down the tracks toward the train and barely cleared the roof.

THE ASSAULT came as a complete surprise. There had been heavy military movement during the night, but this died down as dawn approached, and no one expected an attack once it was already getting light.

Marines with blackened faces appeared out of the dense mist rolling across the flat pastureland to launch the assault.

There was heavy machinegun fire, then the planes appeared and a series of booms was heard.

After a short lull, three bright flashes were seen inside the train but there was no sound. The only sign of damage to the train seemed to be broken windows.

Less than an hour after the attack, streams of ambulances began ferrying survivors to a special medical reception post at the Academic Hospital at Groningen. They traveled a long road cleared of all traffic.

At the school, at least four armored cars were engaged in the assault and automatic weapons fire was heard. Marines were later seen at the school raising their fists in a gesture of victory and shouting, "Hurray, hurray."

After about 10 minutes the action appeared to have died down. Reporters and photographers at other vantage points said the train seemed undamaged and they did not think there was any shooting inside the carriages.

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Ray escapes from prison

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI)—James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, broke out of the maximum security Brushy Mountain prison in a hall of gunfire Friday night, triggering a massive manhunt.

A spokesman in the governor's office at Nashville said Ray and six other men "went over the wall" at about 8 p.m. EDT.

"The escape occurred during the evening recreation period," according to Brooks Parker, a spokesman for Gov. Ray Blanton.

"THE PRISONERS escaped using a homemade ladder made out of lightning conduit (wire). One has been captured and there are still six at large. One of them is James Earl Ray."

The one recaptured was injured as he went over the wall. Bank robber Jerry Ward was shot by guards and taken to Oak Ridge Hospital.

FBI agents, not waiting for an invitation, rushed to the fortress-like prison buried in the Tennessee mountains 40 miles northeast of Knoxville near Oak Ridge.

"Warden Davis informs me that the search underway is made up of 125 correctional officers, 10 highway patrolmen, two FBI men on the scene, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation agents and local law enforcement officers from Morgan County," said Parker.

"AT THE PRESENT time, prison bloodhounds are in pursuit of three of the six escapees. The warden is having a standby team of dogs brought in."

King was felled by a single shot as he stood on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn., on the evening of April 4, 1968.

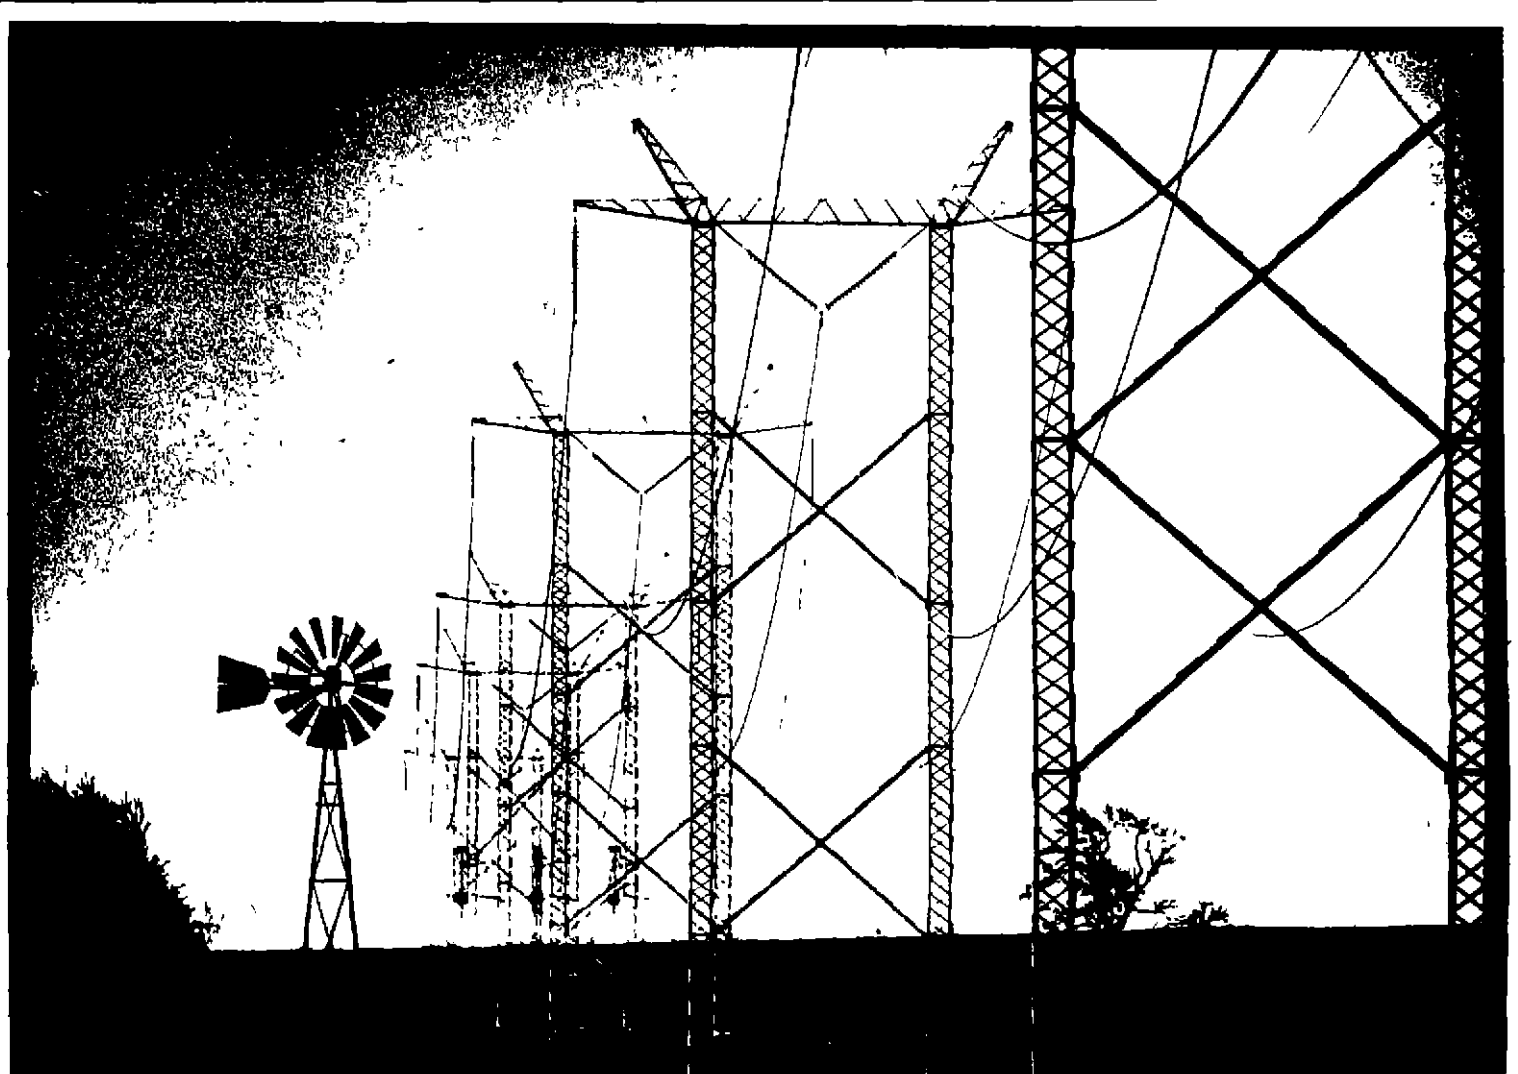

An intensive manhunt soon focused on Ray, then a fugitive from the Missouri State Prison. He was arrested at London's Heathrow Airport on June 5.

On March 10, 1969, after shuffling through several attorneys and winding up with noted defense lawyer Percy Foreman, Ray entered a guilty plea and was sentenced to 99 years. There was no testimony.

Almost from the moment he entered prison, Ray began protesting his conviction, saying his attorneys railroaded him. He claimed he was working for a man named "Raoul," who he thought was a gunrunner, and had been set up to take the blame for the killing.

The government claimed he killed King with a rifle aimed through the bathroom window of a flophouse. The rifle was found in a bag by the door of the building.

Ray's efforts for a new trial were rejected by one court after another, although there were many unexplained facets to the case such as where he got the money to flee to, and around, Europe after the killing.

WINDMILLS WERE bringing power to the Midwest long before electrical power lines were installed. And before that they were used to pump water on farms. Today's wind generators are slimmer and many are mounted on rooftops. They aren't a common sight yet, but many people say the winds are one source of power that will have to be tapped.

Search for energy tilts to windmills

by LYNN ASINOF

A lot of people chuckled when Illinois Schools Supt. Joseph Cronin suggested that state schools might someday be powered by windmills.

But a visit to Plum Brook, Ohio would make the chucklers think twice. There stands the country's largest wind generator, with twin blades 125 feet across. It can produce 100 kilowatts of electricity when the wind blows at 18 miles per hour.

Built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation in 1975, the wind generator is considered a first step.

IT IS PART of the government's push to explore the use of large wind generators to produce low-cost electricity. The Energy Research and Development Administration estimates that wind will provide 1,000 megawatts of electricity by the year 1985, equivalent to 0.5 per cent of the nation's total projected energy needs.

In the next two years, the government will build four large machines. This year alone, it will spend $20.5 million on windpower research, and 30 per cent of that will be spent on large wind generators.

But most people probably will feel the effects of windpower from another direction — the small wind generators mounted on rooftops.

That's the approach taken by the 11th Street Movement in New York City, a low income neighborhood group that has rebuilt a burned-out tenement.

WITH A government grant, the group installed a $4,000 windmill that can produce 2,000 watts of electricity an hour. That's not enough to power the entire building, but it will produce enough to cut the electric bill for common areas of the building by one-third.

The 11th Street Movement bought a rebuilt Jacobs windmill from Windworks, a technological community 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. It is one big source of information on windpower systems.

Solar heat energy wave of the future

Solar energy is a boom business. Small companies have sprouted like weeds bearing names like Sunworks, Mr. Sun, Solar-Aire and Helio-Dynamics.

Many of the companies have put lots of research into their product, others are fly-by-nighters. But all are anxious to cash in on the new alternative energy campaign, and many are finding they can't handle all the business coming their way.

Just ask Stephen Miller, who founded Amcon Inc., a Carbondale firm that produces complete solar air systems. Just 1½-year-old, Amcon was started because Miller couldn't find the equipment he needed on the market.

"I WAS A contractor and we had some clients come in wanting to have a solar home built," Miller said. "We took a look at what was on the market. That was in 1973-74. Then we set about to design our own system."

Today Miller says he can't keep up with the business. "We're by no means set up to handle the influx of inquiries we have right now," he said, noting he's gotten letters from every state in the U.S., not to mention a string of foreign countries including Liberia, Germany and Israel.

The solar industry is doubling in size every nine months based on the amount of solar collector plates sold, said Sheldon Butt, president of the Solar Energy Industries Assn. But the industry is still in its infancy and Butt says there will be many changes before it stabilizes.

Right now, most solar industries are small businesses. Butt said that creates built-in problems since the companies often don't have needed organizational or marketing skills.

"LARGELY WHAT you find today is the founder of a company is a good technical man who sat down and designed himself a good product and now he doesn't know what to do with it," Butt said.

Although there is a tremendous market for solar products, often the solar companies have a hard time getting their product in the public eye. They don't have enough time to develop good public relations, and that is one reason why it is hard to get information on solar products.

The Federal Energy Administration publishes a list of companies active in solar energy, but Butt points out that the FEA often has trouble finding the smaller companies.

36 streets set for paving in $153,829 plan

Thirty-six streets are to be included in this year's Elk Grove Village paving and sealing program.

The $153,829 proposal goes to the village board for approval Tuesday as part of an over-all $336,954 street maintenance package for the year, which also would include $20,250 in sidewalk replacement work. Work would not begin until August.

If the program is approved, new asphalt surfaces would be spread over parts of 13 streets in the village covering 83,725 square yards.

IN ADDITION, parts of 24 streets, including one that partially will be repaved, will be seal coated.

That work, to cover 74,915 square yards, is a process of cutting the top of the street, mixing the cut material with fresh asphalt and laying a new surface and seal. It is a process that is used when a "cosmetic" cover is needed, said Street Supt. Jack B. Andrews.

About $89,600 would go toward repaving and $44,949 toward the seal coating. In addition, $19,280 would be spent on spot patching.

The resurfacing work would be scheduled for:

- Brantwood Avenue, from Arlington Heights Road to Chelmsford Lane
- Cheltenham Road, from Wellington Avenue to Bristol Lane.
- Exmoor Road, from Cheltenham Road to Wellington Avenue.
- Grosvenor Lane, from Victoria Lane to Tower Lane.
- Leicester Road, from Winston Drive to South Gloucester Drive and

by ROBERT KYLE

It began more than two years ago with a corporate decision to expand. It ended this week in a Washington, D.C., courtroom when U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica ordered top officials of Gould Inc., to sell a 32-acre tract in Rolling Meadows and to pay at least $200,000 to their own company, even if it means taking money from their own pockets.

Along the way came a complex real estate deal where four Gould officials, their attorney and their real estate agent used a "straw person" to inflate the price of a piece of land sold to the company while reducing the price of a tract they bought for themselves.

THE GOULD OFFICIALS are not saying much about Sirica's order or the Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of the transaction. One principal, Gould Chairman William T. Ylvisaker, issued a statement saying he agreed to the settlement without admitting any violations of the law and only to avoid "time-consuming, expensive litigation and delay."

From the company's headquarters in Rolling Meadows, publicist Marianna Durk said there will be no discipline for the employees involved in the transaction.

"They didn't do anything wrong," she said. "The only thing was the failure to disclose."

The SEC also aimed its complaint against the failure of Ylvisaker and Gould financial vice president Edwin C. Parker to tell the company's board of directors about their dealings. The agency's complaint simply outlines the facts of the land deals, facts, an attorney says, that will never be tested in court.

The SEC paints this picture: In January 1975 Ylvisaker instructed Illinois Development Corp., Gould's real estate agent, to negotiate for a seven-acre triangle on the south side of the Northwest Tollway at Golf Road. The triangle was part of a 39-acre tract — the rest lies north of the tollway.

IDC OFFERED $280,000 at first, then $300,000, then $325,000 and finally $350,000, the price determined by an appraiser hired by the owners.

The owners were ready to accept that price only if Gould provided access to the landlocked 32-acre parcel north of the tollway. Negotiations came to an impasse over the question of access in September 1975.

In December IDC told Gould that the easiest way to acquire the seven-acre triangle was to buy the entire 39 acres for $1.4 million. IDC then recommended that Gould sell the property north of the tollway to finance the entire deal.

William D. Sanders, IDC president, told Ylvisaker in January that the land was worth more than $1.4 million. Sometime around the first of March, Sanders and Ylvisaker began talking about buying the 32-acre tract as an investment of their own.

IDC THEN AGREED to buy the entire 39-acre tract through a "straw person" who was to divide the land between Gould and a newly formed group called the "Algonquin Road Partners" — Ylvisaker, financial vice president Parker, Gould president Daniel Carroll, another unidentified Gould officer, attorney Thomas A. Reynolds Jr. and seven IDC employees.

The SEC does not know it, but the new partnership jelled at about the same time that the City of Rolling Meadows, at IDC's urging, solved the problem of access to the 32-acre tract.

It was in December 1975 or January 1976 that IDC first approached the city about using a city-owned easement running south from Algonquin Road, recalls City Engineer James J. Muldowney. In April, the city council agreed to build a street and a bridge if the developer paid the $185,000 cost.

The SEC does know that the deal began to fall into place in May when a bank approved "more than 100 per cent financing" for the land.

GOULD ENDED UP paying $940,000 for the seven-acre triangle that had been appraised at $350,000. Instead of the appraised price of $1 million, the new partnership paid $460,000 for its 32 acres.

Immediately, the partnership put that parcel on the market for three times the purchase price.

In July, the SEC says, Gould's planning manager, Jack E. Jackson, voiced his concern that the firm may have paid too much for its land. For the second time, Gould president Carroll urged that Ylvisaker explain the transaction to Gould's directors.

The directors did not learn of the transaction, though, until August when Ylvisaker sent them a "misleading" letter that said the partnership had paid the appraised price for its land.

THE SEC'S LAST entry is dated Oct. 15, 1976: the Algonquin Road Partners offered to sell the land to Gould's directors for $460,000. At the same time, Ylvisaker, in his capacity as chairman and chief executive officer, recommended that the offer be refused.

Mrs. Durk and planning manager Jackson said the SEC complaint will have no impact on the firm's plans to build a new 10-story building near the tollway.

The future of the 32-acre parcel is not as clear. IDC originally had talked about luring a large corporation to the site. City Engineer Muldowney says he's seen plans for a residential subdivision.

But, in addition to extracting a promise that Gould, Ylvisaker and financial vice president Parker will adhere to the SEC's disclosure regulations, Sirica's order says that the Algonquin Road Partners must sell their land.

Gould is to receive at least $200,000 of the proceeds, the agreement says, even if that means a loss for the partnership. If the land is sold at a profit, all of the profit must go to Gould. According to the agreement the partnership is to receive no more than the $460,000 they paid for the land.

Goldblatt's looking at several sites

Goldblatt's officials say they will build a department store in or near Mount Prospect but not necessarily in the Mount Prospect Plaza where fire destroyed their store in February.

"It's our intention to continue to serve the Mount Prospect area and we are looking at several sites," said Albert Dolin, executive vice president for Goldblatt's.

Dolin said his firm is considering relocation at several sites other than the plaza, Rand and Central roads, but has not ruled out the shopping center. "We'll be able to tell you something in a week to 10 days," he said.

THE ABSENCE OF Goldblatt's from the plaza has caused concern by owners of several smaller businesses in the shopping center. They say without a large store that attracts more people, their sales are declining and unless a department store such as Goldblatt's comes to the center the plaza could go out of business.

Meanwhile, village officials have been told by the owners of the shopping center that demolition of the Goldblatt's ruins is expected to begin the week of June 20. However, the owners, National Shopping Centers Management Corp., Rye, N. Y., have not yet sought a permit to raze the building.

"I'm anxious to get it down," Village Mgr. Robert J. Eppley said. "The permit application for demolition is expected shortly."

A spokesman for National Shopping Centers would neither confirm nor deny whether Goldblatt's will be rebuilding in the plaza. They have said several prospective new tenants have inquired about the vacant space in the shopping center.

Mayor Carolyn H. Krause agreed with Eppley that the Goldblatt's remains are an "unsightly thing" and should be removed for both safety and esthetic reasons. "The initial step is to have that demolished and then moved away," Mrs. Krause said. "My understanding is they are going to do so. I want that out of there."

Although Goldblatt's officials said they are looking in or near Mount Prospect for a construction site, Mrs.

Krause said she does not know of any vacant property in the village currently zoned for commercial use and large enough for a department store. "For that size, I can't think of any place available."

Mrs. Krause said one possible location for a Goldblatt's store might be at Ill. Rte. 83 and Golf Road, where last year a National Food Store went out of business.

Dist. 54 panels seeking members

The Schaumburg Township Dist. 54 Board of Education is seeking citizen members for its three standing committees.

Residents interested in serving on the policy, education or business and administration committees should send letters stating their interest to Dist. 54, 804 W. Bode Rd., Schaumburg, 60194. Deadline for applications is June 20.

The policy committee, which reviews and updates the board's policy manual, is headed by board member Arlene Czajkowski.

Board member Dr. Edgar Feldman will head the education committee, which reviews the district's instructional program and materials.

Board member Dennis Watts will be chairman of the business and administration committee, which works with district administrators to evaluate district business needs and to improve efficiency and economy in the district.

The board also has established a citizens' advisory committee whose members will be chosen after school begins in September. The citizens' advisory committee provides a forum for community opinion.

Andrews said the list of sidewalks to be replaced is incomplete.

Funds for the entire $336,954 package are to be provided from the village's share of the state motor fuel tax.

Work on the projects will not begin until August, Andrews said. After the village board approves the plan, it must be submitted to the state for similar approval. Once that is received, the village would ask for contract bids.

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

by PETER J. SHAW

GLIMMEN, The Netherlands (UPI)—Dutch troops backed by Starfighter jets stormed a hijacked train and an elementary school to end the ordeal of 55 hostages who had been held by Moluccan gunmen for 20 days.

As the firing ceased, some of the hostages aboard the train were seen walking to waiting ambulances.

The attack began at dawn and heavy machine gun fire could be heard along with the boom of heavier weapons as the jets roared overhead.

THE ATTACK followed the breakdown of attempts by Moluccan mediators to negotiate a settlement with the gunmen who are seeking the independence of their island homeland from Indonesia and have demanded a getaway plane, and the release of 21 Moluccan prisoners.

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come from within the train. However, the four-coach express remained intact.

There were no immediate reports of casualties but stretchers were taken directly to the train.

The use of jets and mortars with what seemed to be blank ammunition apparently was meant to intimidate and confuse the gunmen. At least six F104 Starfighter jets crisscrossed above the train at a height of no more than 50 feet, their afterburners glowing red in the deep blue morning light.

The first plane streaked straight down the tracks toward the train and barely cleared the roof.

THE ASSAULT came as a complete surprise. There had been heavy military movement during the night, but this died down as dawn approached, and no one expected an attack once it was already getting light.

Marines with blackened faces appeared out of the dense mist rolling across the flat pastureland to launch the assault.

There was heavy machinegun fire, then the planes appeared and a series of booms was heard.

After a short lull, three bright flashes were seen inside the train but there was no sound. The only sign of damage to the train seemed to be broken windows.

Less than an hour after the attack, streams of ambulances began ferrying survivors to a special medical reception post at the Academic Hospital at Groningen. They traveled a long road cleared of all traffic.

At the school, at least four armored cars were engaged in the assault and automatic weapons fire was heard. Marines were later seen at the school raising their fists in a gesture of victory and shouting, "Hurray, hurray."

After about 10 minutes the action appeared to have died down. Reporters and photographers at other vantage points said the train seemed undamaged and they did not think there was any shooting inside the carriages.

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Ray escapes from prison

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI)—James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, broke out of the maximum security Brushy Mountain prison in a hall of gunfire Friday night, triggering a massive manhunt.

A spokesman in the governor's office at Nashville said Ray and six other men "went over the wall" at about 8 p.m. EDT.

"The escape occurred during the evening recreation period," according to Brooks Parker, a spokesman for Gov. Ray Blanton.

THE PRISONERS escaped using a homemade ladder made out of lighting conduit (wire). One has been captured and there are still six at large. One of them is James Earl Ray.

The one recaptured was injured as he went over the wall. Bank robber Jerry Ward was shot by guards and taken to Oak Ridge Hospital.

FBI agents, not waiting for an invitation, rushed to the fortress-like prison buried in the Tennessee mountains 40 miles northeast of Knoxville near Oak Ridge.

"Warden Davis informs me that the search underway is made up of 125 correctional officers, 10 highway patrolmen, two FBI men on the scene, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation agents and local law enforcement officers from Morgan County," said Parker.

"AT THE PRESENT time, prison bloodhounds are in pursuit of three of the six escapees. The warden is having a standby team of dogs brought in."

King was felled by a single shot as he stood on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn., on the evening of April 4, 1968.

An intensive manhunt soon focused on Ray, then a fugitive from the Missouri State Prison. He was arrested at London's Heathrow Airport on June 5.

On March 10, 1969, after shuffling through several attorneys and winding up with noted defense lawyer Percy Foreman, Ray entered a guilty plea and was sentenced to 99 years. There was no testimony.

Almost from the moment he entered prison, Ray began protesting his conviction, saying his attorneys railroaded him. He claimed he was working for a man named "Raoul," who he thought was a gunrunner, and had been set up to take the blame for the killing.

The government claimed he killed King with a rifle aimed through the bathroom window of a flophouse. The rifle was found in a bag by the door of the building.

Ray's efforts for a new trial were rejected by one court after another, although there were many unexplained facets to the case such as where he got the money to flee to, and around, Europe after the killing.

Sirica orders Gould to pay itself $200,000

by ROBERT KYLE

It began more than two years ago with a corporate decision to expand.

It ended this week in a Washington, D.C., courtroom when U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica ordered top officials of Gould Inc. to sell a 32-acre tract in Rolling Meadows and to pay at least $200,000 to their own company, even if it means taking money from their own pockets.

Along the way came a complex real estate deal where four Gould officials, their attorney and their real estate agent used a "straw person" to inflate the price of a piece of land sold to the company while reducing the price of a tract they bought for themselves.

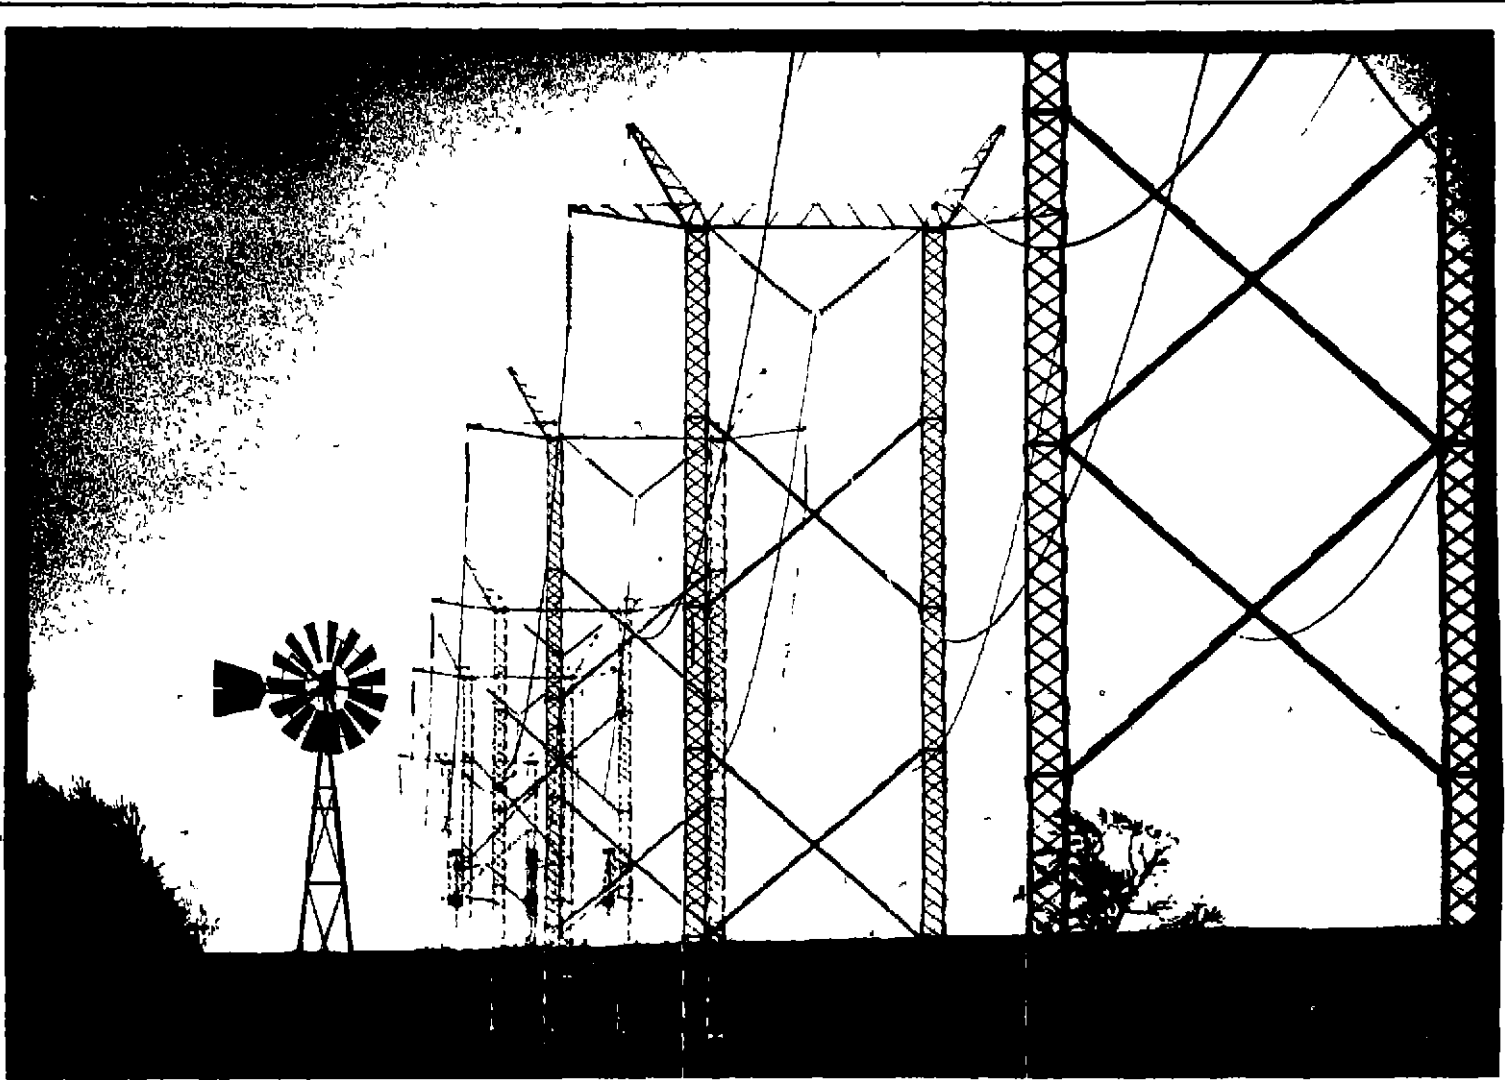

THE GOULD OFFICIALS are not saying much about Sirica's order or the Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of the transaction. One principal, Gould Chairman William T. Ylvisaker, issued a statement saying he agreed to the settlement without admitting any violations of the law and only to avoid "time-consuming, expensive litigation and delay."

From the company's headquarters in Rolling Meadows, publicist Marianna Durk said there will be no discipline for the employees involved in the transaction.

"They didn't do anything wrong," she said. "The only thing was the failure to disclose."

The SEC also aimed its complaint against the failure of Ylvisaker and Gould financial vice president Edwin C. Parker to tell the company's board

WINDMILLS WERE bringing power to the Midwest long before electrical power lines were installed. And before that they were used to pump water on farms. Today's wind generators are slimmer and many are mounted on rooftops. They aren't a common sight yet, but many people say the winds are one source of power that will have to be tapped.

Search for energy tilts to windmills

by LYNN ASINOF

A lot of people chuckled when Illinois Schools Supt. Joseph Cronin suggested that state schools might someday be powered by windmills.

But a visit to Plum Brook, Ohio would make the chucklers think twice. There stands the country's largest wind generator, with twin blades 125 feet across. It can produce 100 kilowatts of electricity when the wind blows at 18 miles per hour.

Built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation in 1975, the wind generator is considered a first step.

IT IS PART of the government's push to explore the use of large wind generators to produce low-cost electricity. The Energy Research and Development Administration estimates that wind will provide 1,000 megawatts of electricity by the year 1985, equivalent to 0.5 per cent of the nation's total projected energy needs.

In the next two years, the government will build four large machines. This year alone, it will spend $20.5 million on windpower research, and 30 per cent of that will be spent on large wind generators.

But most people probably will feel the effects of windpower from another direction — the small wind generators mounted on rooftops.

That's the approach taken by the 11th Street Movement in New York City, a low income neighborhood group that has rebuilt a burned-out tenement.

WITH A government grant, the group installed a $4,000 windmill that can produce 2,000 watts of electricity an hour. That's not enough to power the entire building, but it will produce enough to cut the electric bill for common areas of the building by one-third.

The 11th Street Movement bought a rebuilt Jacobs windmill from Windworks, a technological community 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. It is one big source of information on windpower systems.

Solar heat energy wave of the future

Solar energy is a boom business. Small companies have sprouted like weeds bearing names like Sunworks, Mr. Sun, Solar-Aire and Helio-Dynamics.

Many of the companies have put lots of research into their product, others are fly-by-nighters. But all are anxious to cash in on the new alternative energy campaign, and many are finding they can't handle all the business coming their way.

Just ask Stephen Miller, who founded Amcon Inc., a Carbondale firm that produces complete solar air systems. Just 1½-year-old, Amcon was started because Miller couldn't find the equipment he needed on the market.

"I WAS A contractor and we had some clients come in wanting to have a solar home built," Miller said. "We took a look at what was on the market. That was in 1973-74. Then we set about to design our own system."

Today Miller says he can't keep up with the business. "We're by no means set up to handle the influx of inquiries we have right now," he said, noting he's gotten letters from every state in the U.S., not to mention a string of foreign countries including Liberia, Germany and Israel.

The solar industry is doubling in size every nine months based on the amount of solar collector plates sold," said Sheldon Butt, president of the Solar Energy Industries Assn. But the industry is still in its infancy and Butt says there will be many changes before it stabilizes.

Right now, most solar industries are small businesses. Butt said that creates built-in problems since the companies often don't have needed organizational or marketing skills.

"LARGELY WHAT you find today is the founder of a company is a good technical man who sat down and designed himself a good product and now he doesn't know what to do with it," Butt said.

Although there is a tremendous market for solar products, often the solar companies have a hard time getting their product in the public eye. They don't have enough time to develop good public relations, and that is one reason why it is hard to get information on solar products.

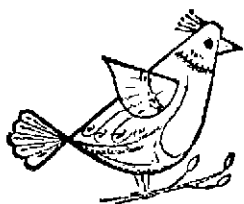

The Federal Energy Administration publishes a list of companies active in solar energy, but Butt points out that the FEA often has trouble finding the smaller companies.

Started in 1970 under the direction and sponsorship of R. Buckminster Fuller, Windworks began experimenting with simple wind machines for the homebuilder.

"The homebuilding approach was fine as an educational tool, (Continued in Section 2, on Page 6)

Judge Sirica orders Gould to pay itself $200,000

of directors about their dealings. The agency's complaint simply outlines the facts of the land deals, facts, an attorney says, that will never be tested in court.

In January 1975 Ylvisaker instructed Illinois Development Corp., Gould's real estate agent, to negotiate for a seven-acre triangle on the south side of the Northwest Tollway at Golf Road. The triangle was part of a 39-acre tract — the rest lies north of the tollway.

IDC OFFERED $280,000 at first, then $300,000, then $325,000 and finally $350,000, the price determined by an appraiser hired by the owners. The owners were ready to accept that price only if Gould provided access to the landlocked 32-acre parcel north of the tollway. Negotiations came to an impasse over the question of access in September 1975.

In December IDC told Gould that the easiest way to acquire the seven-acre triangle was to buy the entire 39 acres for $1.4 million. IDC then recommended that Gould sell the property north of the tollway to finance the entire deal.

William D. Sanders, IDC president, told Ylvisaker in January that the land was worth more than $1.4 million. Sometime around the first of March, Sanders and Ylvisaker began talking about buying the 32-acre tract as an investment of their own.

IDC THEN AGREED to buy the entire 39-acre tract through a "straw person" who was to divide the land between Gould and a newly formed group called the "Algonquin Road Partners" — Ylvisaker, financial vice president Parker, Gould president Daniel Carroll, another unidentified Gould officer, attorney Thomas A. Reynolds Jr. and seven IDC employees.

The SEC does not know it, but the new partnership jelled at about the same time that the City of Rolling Meadows, at IDC's urging, solved the problem of access to the 32-acre tract.

It was in December 1975 or January 1976 that IDC first approached the city about using a city-owned easement running south from Algonquin Road, recalls City Engineer James J. Muldowney. In April, the city council agreed to build a street and a bridge if the developer paid the $185,000 cost.

The SEC does know that the deal began to fall into place in May when a bank approved "more than 100 per cent financing" for the land.

GOULD ENDED UP paying $940,000 for the seven-acre triangle that had been appraised at $350,000. Instead of the appraised price of $1 million, the new partnership paid $460,000 for its 32 acres.

Immediately, the partnership put that parcel on the market for three times the purchase price.

In July, the SEC says, Gould's planning manager, Jack E. Jackson, voiced his concern that the firm may have paid too much for its land. For the second time, Gould president Carroll urged that Ylvisaker explain the transaction to Gould's directors.

The directors did not learn of the transaction, though, until August when Ylvisaker sent them a "misleading" letter that said the partnership had paid the appraised price for its land.

THE SEC'S LAST entry is dated Oct. 15, 1976: the Algonquin Road Partners offered to sell the land to Gould's directors for $460,000. At the same time, Ylvisaker, in his capacity as chairman and chief executive officer, recommended that the offer be refused.

Mrs. Durk and planning manager Jackson said the SEC complaint will have no impact on the firm's plans to build a new 10-story building near the tollway.

The future of the 32-acre parcel is not as clear. IDC originally had talked about luring a large corporation to the site. City Engineer Muldowney says he's seen plans for a residential subdivision.

But, in addition to extracting a promise that Gould, Ylvisaker and financial vice president Parker will adhere to the SEC's disclosure regulations, Sirica's order says that the Algonquin Road Partners must sell their land.

Gould is to receive at least $200,000 of the proceeds, the agreement says, even if that means a loss for the partnership. If the land is sold at a profit, all of the profit must go to Gould. According to the agreement the partnership is to receive no more than the $460,000 they paid for the land.

Des Plaines elevator has halting habit

by SCOTT FOSDICK

If you have an overwhelming fear of being stuck in a small, box-like room, don't use the elevators at the Des Plaines Civic Center, 1420 Miner St.

You can ride the elevator there one hundred times without any trouble. But that 101st trip just might be a zinger.

Ask Ald. Parick Brannigan, 4th, or Ald. John E. Seitz, 7th. Or Ellis Perl, the assistant city engineer. All of them — and many more — have at one time or another found themselves marooned in the civic center elevators.

"WE'VE HAD MORE calls from the civic center than from all the rest of the elevators in the city combined," Fire Chief Don Corey says.

Getting caught in the civic center elevators may be a hassle, but it's not a disaster. Inside each of the two elevators is a special telephone, a hotline to the Des Plaines Fire Dept. When you get stuck, just pick up the phone and shout for help — it's bound to come pretty soon.

"It only takes us just a matter of minutes," Corey says. "They aren't in there at the most more than seven or ten minutes."

Usually the elevator gets stuck somewhere between floors. When the firefighters get there, they have a key to open the door just above or below where the elevator is stuck. Depending on where it stops, you have to climb, jump, or just walk out.

AND, IF YOU get scared, there's always a reassuring voice on the other end of the line to keep you from climbing the walls of your temporary cell.

"Some people really get a phobia to it, being shut in closed spaces. I know some people will walk flights of stairs to avoid taking the elevator," Corey says.

Why should elevators in a building that's just over 2 years old break down so often?

Joseph Schwab, public works commissioner, blames it on the complicated circuitry.

Some speculate it's because the elevators are serviced by a different company than the one that originally installed them.

The two Dover elevators were installed by the Gregory Elevator Service Co. of Chicago. City Clerk Eleanor Rohrbach says that company might be able to keep the elevators running more regularly than they are now.

The Mid-States Elevator Service Co., Chicago, got the maintenance contract from the city council two years ago, because it offered to do the work cheaper than Gregory.

But the maintenance contract came up for renewal this week, and the civic center's elevator woes may soon be over.

This year, the Gregory company was the low bidder. So the council gave Gregory the elevator contract — and gave Mid-States the shaft.

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Last week and again Thursday, Dr. Tan and Mrs. Josina Soumokil, 64, widow of a slain Moluccan leader, boarded a hijacked train where 51 of the hostages were held in unsuccessful attempts to reach a settlement with the estimated 10 gunmen.

Relatives of the hostages pleaded to be consulted before authorities take any action that could result in death or injury. Their request was rejected.

The gunmen have demanded a getaway plane and the release of 21 Moluccans imprisoned for other terrorist actions in pursuit of independence for their island homeland in the Pacific, which is now part of Indonesia.

The plight of the hostages was underlined Thursday when one of them surreptitiously used a mirror to flash a Morse code message which said, "Get us out of here."

Deputy Health Minister Joseph Hendriks said he met with relatives of the hostages, who are not allowed to talk to reporters, and spoke to them "very openly" but refused to give details to reporters.

"Their impatience also is increasing and they are longing for the end," he said.

The reports of preparations for an attack sparked speculation they were meant to shake up the gunmen — which a Dutch spokesman denied, saying "anxious terrorists can be very, very dangerous." Supporters of the Moluccans also threatened to stage a wave of terrorist reprisals.

One mediator, Dr. Hassan Tan, 56, a Moluccan physician, said, "If there is one wrong word, emotions will erupt and then the most horrible things may happen."

Tan said, "Our attempt to build a bridge between the two parties has been a complete failure."

trolmen, two FBI men on the scene, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation agents and local law enforcement officers from Morgan County," said Parker.

"AT THE PRESENT time, prison bloodhounds are in pursuit of three of the six escapees. The warden is having a standby team of dogs brought in."

King was felled by a single shot as he stood on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn., on the evening of April 4, 1968.

An intensive manhunt soon focused on Ray, then a fugitive from the Missouri State Prison. He was arrested at London's Heathrow Airport on June 5.

On March 10, 1969, after shuffling through several attorneys and winding up with noted defense lawyer Percy Foreman, Ray entered a guilty plea and was sentenced to 99 years. There was no testimony.

Almost from the moment he entered prison, Ray began protesting his conviction, saying his attorneys railroaded him. He claimed he was working for a man named "Raoul," who he thought was a gunrunner, and had been set up to take the blame for the killing.

The government claimed he killed King with a rifle aimed through the bathroom window of a flophouse. The rifle was found in a bag by the door of the building.

Ray's efforts for a new trial were rejected by one court after another, although there were many unexplained facets to the case such as where he got the money to flee to, and around, Europe after the killing.

Parkash wants village to level on water rates

Malik Parkash wants Schaumburg officials to level with the people about proposed water rate increases instead of talking about the conservation angle.

"Why don't they tell it like it really is? They have to raise the rates because the water fund is in the red and conservation doesn't have a darn thing to do with it," the Lancer Park Homeowners Assn. president said.

Parkash said the proposed 13 per cent increase for some residential users that goes to the village board Tuesday is unfair. The increase would apply to an average family of four using 23,000 gallons each quarter whose rate would jump from $20.08 to $23.55.

PARKASH FAVORS A steep rate increase for customers using 30,000 or more gallons each quarter.

Village officials are considering new water rates that will cost customers nearly $167,000 per year and erase deficits that have built up during the past two years.

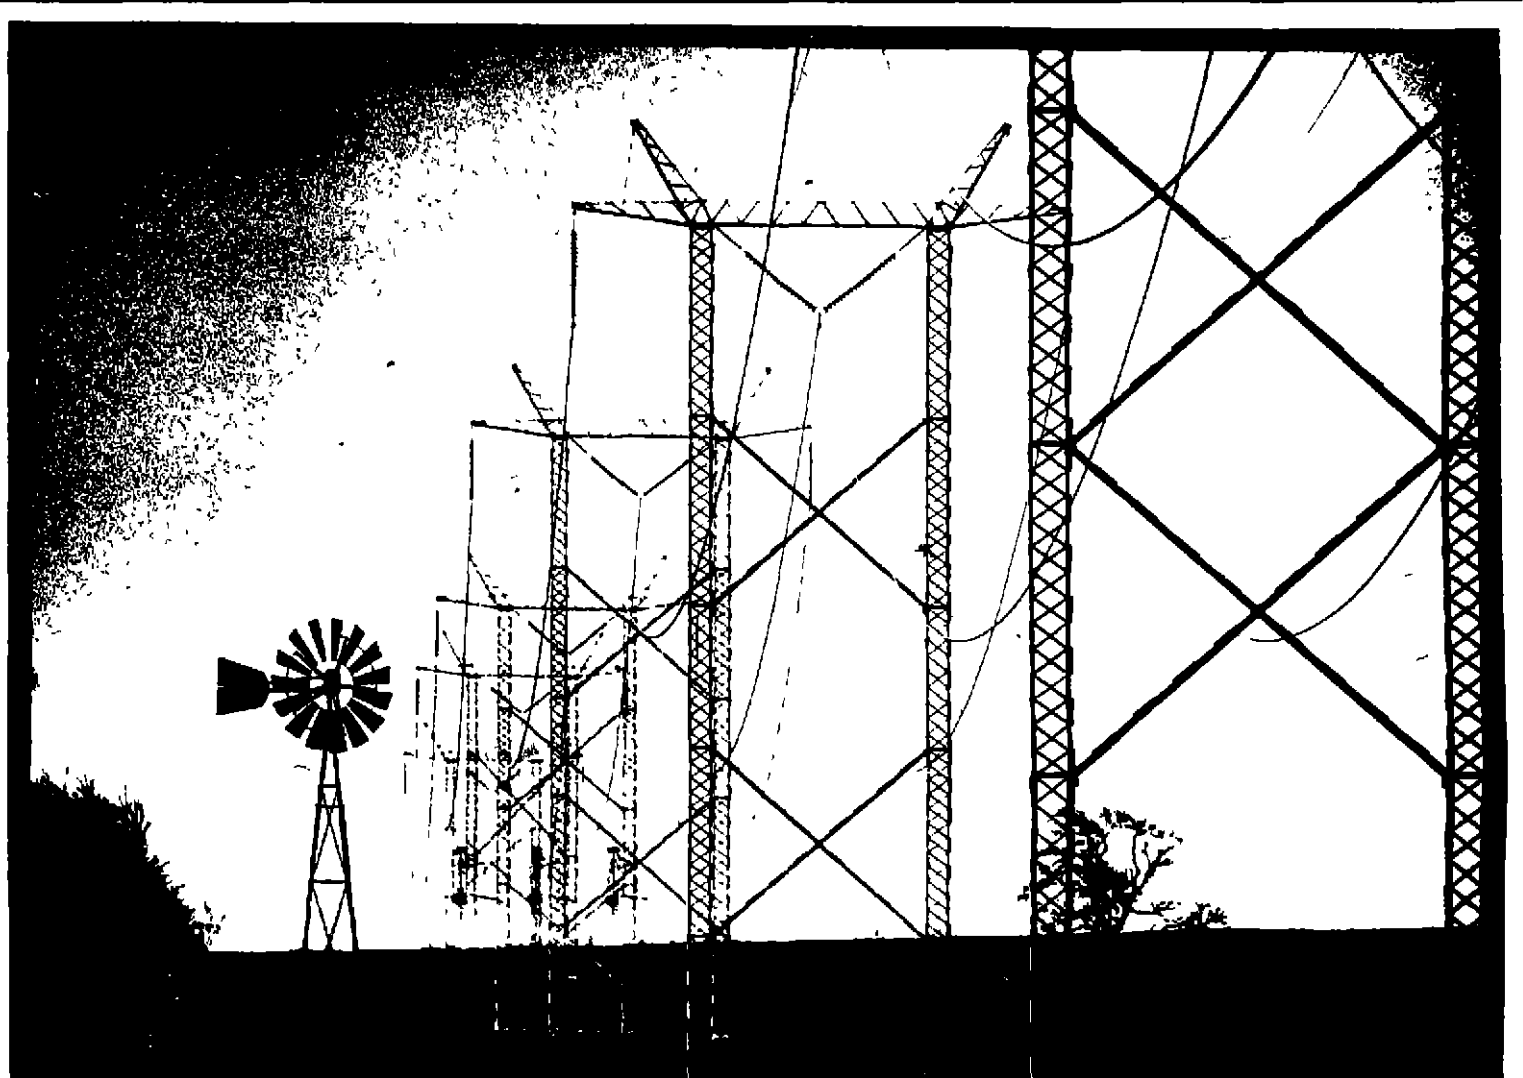

Unless the rates are increased the village will continue to experience water system deficits that will strain other village funds.

While the new rates will also affect industrial and commercial users, residential customers would face the steepest increase.

IN STRUCTURING THE rates, village officials say they want to reward customers who conserve water. Now all residential customers pay at least $12 every three months regardless of the amount of water they use.

Under the new system, persons using 4,000 gallons or less would pay $4

WINDMILLS WERE bringing power to the Midwest long before electrical power lines were installed. And before that they were used to pump water on farms. Today's wind generators are slimmer and many are mounted on rooftops. They aren't a common sight yet, but many people say the winds are one source of power that will have to be tapped.

Search for energy tilts to windmills

by LYNN ASINOF

A lot of people chuckled when Illinois Schools Supt. Joseph Cronin suggested that state schools might someday be powered by windmills.

But a visit to Plum Brook, Ohio would make the chucklers think twice. There stands the country's largest wind generator, with twin blades 125 feet across. It can produce 100 kilowatts of electricity when the wind blows at 18 miles per hour.

Built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation in 1975, the wind generator is considered a first step.

IT IS PART of the government's push to explore the use of large wind generators to produce low-cost electricity. The Energy Research and Development Administration estimates that wind will provide 1,000 megawatts of electricity by the year 1995, equivalent to 0.5 per cent of the nation's total projected energy needs.

In the next two years, the government will build four large machines. This year alone, it will spend $20.5 million on windpower research, and 30 per cent of that will be spent on large wind generators.

But most people probably will feel the effects of windpower from another direction — the small wind generators mounted on rooftops.

That's the approach taken by the 11th Street Movement in New York City, a low income neighborhood group that has rebuilt a burned-out tenement.

WITH A government grant, the group installed a $4,000 windmill that can produce 2,000 watts of electricity an hour. That's not enough to power the entire building, but it will produce enough to cut the electric bill for common areas of the building by one-third.

The 11th Street Movement bought a rebuilt Jacobs windmill from Windworks, a technological community 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. It is one big source of information on windpower systems.

Harnessing the sun and wind

Started in 1970 under the direction and sponsorship of R. Buckminster Fuller, Windworks began experimenting with simple wind machines for the homebuilder.

"The homebuilding approach was fine as an educational tool, (Continued in Section 2, on Page 6)

Solar heat energy wave of the future

Solar energy is a boom business. Small companies have sprouted like weeds bearing names like Sunworks, Mr. Sun, Solar-Aire and Helio-Dynamics.

Many of the companies have put lots of research into their product, others are fly-by-nighters. But all are anxious to cash in on the new alternative energy campaign, and many are finding they can't handle all the business coming their way.

Just ask Stephen Miller, who founded Amcon Inc., a Carbondale firm that produces complete solar air systems. Just 1½-year-old, Amcon was started because Miller couldn't find the equipment he needed on the market.

"I WAS A contractor and we had some clients come in wanting to have a solar home built," Miller said. "We took a look at what was on the market. That was in 1973-74. Then we set about to design our own system."

Today Miller says he can't keep up with the business. "We're by no means set up to handle the influx of inquiries we have right now," he said, noting he's gotten letters from every state in the U.S., not to mention a string of foreign countries including Liberia, Germany and Israel.

The solar industry is doubling in size every nine months based on the amount of solar collector plates sold, said Sheldon Butt, president of the Solar Energy Industries Assn. But the industry is still in its infancy and Butt says there will be many changes before it stabilizes.

Right now, most solar industries are small businesses. Butt said that creates built-in problems since the companies often don't have needed organizational or marketing skills.

"LARGELY WHAT you find today is the founder of a company is a good technical man who sat down and designed himself a good product and now he doesn't know what to do with it," Butt said.

Although there is a tremendous market for solar products, often the solar companies have a hard time getting their product in the public eye. They don't have enough time to develop good public relations, and that is one reason why it is hard to get information on solar products.

The Federal Energy Administration publishes a list of companies active in solar energy, but Butt points out that the FEA often has trouble finding the smaller companies.

Other federal agencies, like the Dept. of Housing (Continued in Section 2, on Page 6)

IF YOU JUST want to "hole-up" on your vacation this year, Travel takes you to just the place. Jackson Hole, Wyo., is a green saucer of land in the Grand Teton mountains that is secluded from the rest of the world. Legend has it that a man by the name of Davey Jackson was one of the first fur trappers to winter there. Now, outdoors enthusiasts drink in its beauty in any season.

THREE CRIMINOLOGISTS testified Friday in the Patricia Columbo-Frank DeLuca murder trial in an attempt by prosecutors to link physical evidence in the murders to the couple. One witness testified that a strand of hair found on Michael Columbo's body was "99.9 per cent" similar to Miss Columbo's. — Page 3.

Judge Sirica orders Gould to pay itself $200,000

by ROBERT KYLE
It began more than two years ago with a corporate decision to expand. It ended this week in a Washington, D.C., courtroom when U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica ordered top officials of Gould Inc., to sell a 32-acre tract in Rolling Meadows and to pay at least $200,000 to their own company, even if it means taking money from their own pockets.

Along the way came a complex real estate deal where four Gould officials, their attorney and their real estate agent used a "straw person" to inflate the price of a piece of land sold to the company while reducing the price of a tract they bought for themselves.

THE GOULD OFFICIALS are not saying much about Sirica's order or the Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of the transaction. One principal, Gould Chairman William T. Ylvisaker, issued a statement saying he agreed to the settlement without admitting any violations of the law and only to avoid "time-consuming, expensive litigation and delay."

From the company's headquarters

in Rolling Meadows, publicist Marianna Durk said there will be no discipline for the employees involved in the transaction.

"They didn't do anything wrong," she said. "The only thing was the failure to disclose."

The SEC also aimed its complaint against the failure of Ylvisaker and Gould financial vice president Edwin C. Parker to tell the company's board of directors about their dealings. The agency's complaint simply outlines the facts of the land deals, facts, an attorney says, that will never be tested in court.

In January 1975 Ylvisaker instructed Illinois Development Corp., Gould's real estate agent, to negotiate for a seven-acre triangle on the south side of the Northwest Tollway at Golf Road. The triangle was part of a 39-acre tract — the rest lies north of the tollway.

IDC OFFERED $280,000 at first, then $300,000, then $325,000 and finally $350,000, the price determined by an appraiser hired by the owners.

The owners were ready to accept that price only if Gould provided access to the landlocked 32-acre parcel north of the tollway. Negotiations came to an impasse over the question of access in September 1975.

In December IDC told Gould that the easiest way to acquire the seven-acre triangle was to buy the entire 39 acres for $1.4 million. IDC then recommended that Gould sell the property north of the tollway to finance the entire deal.

William D. Sanders, IDC president, told Ylvisaker in January that the land was worth more than $1.4 million. Sometime around the first of March, Sanders and Ylvisaker began talking about buying the 32-acre tract as an investment of their own.

IDC THEN AGREED to buy the entire 39-acre tract through a "straw person" who was to divide the land between Gould and a newly formed group called the "Algonquin Road Partners" — Ylvisaker, financial vice president Parker, Gould president Daniel Carroll, another unidentified Gould officer, attorney Thomas A. Reynolds Jr. and seven IDC employees.

The SEC does not know it, but the new partnership jelled at about the same time that the City of Rolling Meadows, at IDC's urging, solved the problem of access to the 32-acre tract.

It was in December 1975 or January 1976 that IDC first approached the city about using a city-owned easement running south from Algonquin Road, recalls City Engineer James J. Muldowney. In April, the city council agreed to build a street and a bridge if the developer paid the $185,000 cost.

The SEC does know that the deal began to fall into place in May when a bank approved "more than 100 per cent financing" for the land.

GOULD ENDED UP paying $940,000 for the seven-acre triangle that had been appraised at $350,000. Instead of the appraised price of $1 million, the new partnership paid $460,000 for its 32 acres.

Immediately, the partnership put that parcel on the market for three times the purchase price.

In July, the SEC says, Gould's planning manager, Jack E. Jackson, voiced his concern that the firm may have paid too much for its land. For the second time, Gould president Carroll urged that Ylvisaker explain the transaction to Gould's directors.

The directors did not learn of the transaction, though, until August when Ylvisaker sent them a "misleading" letter that said the partnership had paid the appraised price for its land.

THE SEC'S LAST entry is dated Oct. 15, 1976: the Algonquin Road Partners offered to sell the land to Gould's directors for $460,000. At the same time, Ylvisaker, in his capacity as chairman and chief executive officer, recommended that the offer be refused.

Mrs. Durk and planning manager Jackson said the SEC complaint will have no impact on the firm's plans to build a new 10-story building near the tollway.

The future of the 32-acre parcel is not as clear. IDC originally had talked about luring a large corporation to the site. City Engineer Muldowney says he's seen plans for a residential subdivision.

But, in addition to extracting a promise that Gould, Ylvisaker and financial vice president Parker will adhere to the SEC's disclosure regulations, Sirica's order says that the Algonquin Road Partners must sell their land.

Gould is to receive at least $200,000 of the proceeds, the agreement says, even if that means a loss for the partnership. If the land is sold at a profit, all of the profit must go to Gould. According to the agreement the partnership is to receive no more than the $460,000 they paid for the land.

17-yr-old charged with burglaries

A 17-year-old Hoffman Estates boy was arrested Thursday and charged in a series of burglaries last weekend in the Barrington Square area, police said.

Ronald Love, 17, of 2169 Somersworth Pl., was being held Thursday night at the Hoffman Estates Municipal Building lockup under a $5,000 bond.

A 15-year-old juvenile boy police said they believe worked as Love's partner was arrested Wednesday night. He has not been charged, Det. James Dutton said.

Police said they linked both boys to at least five home burglaries June 3, 4 and 5.

BOTH YOUTHS were identified by persons who said the boys came to their doors and asked for a person who did not live there, Dutton said.

"They apparently were just checking out the house to see who was home and who wasn't," Dutton said. "We made the arrests with the cooperation of citizens in a photo-lineup."

Money allotted for part-time employees

Two federal grants totaling $16,000 will enable the Schaumburg Park District to hire 11 temporary employees.

Eight of the posts are summer jobs in recreation and general park maintenance. They are open to currently unemployed persons under 22 years old.

Three jobs are in general park maintenance and require some outdoor, landscaping or light mechanical experience.

Park Finance Director Jerry Baer said these positions will last through Sept. 30 and may be continued if additional grant money is available.

Money to provide the jobs is available to the park district through the U.S. Comprehensive Employment and Training Act. The grants are administered by Cook County.

Federal guidelines require the jobs be offered to suburban Cook County residents. They are not limited to persons of a specific income level, but those hired for the program must be unemployed at the time they apply for the jobs.

Baer said persons applying for the Schaumburg jobs need not be residents of the park district.

For more information or to apply for a job, contact Baer at the park district, 220 E. Weathersfield Way, or call 694-4660 Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

tinue to pay a minimum charge of $12, which would cover the first 12,000 gallons. The village proposes charges of $1.05 for each additional 1,000 gallons, up from 90 cents, until usage reaches 24,000 gallons.

About half of the village residents fall into that category and village officials estimate they would pay about $29,000 more each year.

After 24,000 gallons, the price would continue to climb — to $1.10 per 1,000 gallons up to 36,000 gallons, to $1.15 up to 48,000, to $1.55 up to 120,000 gallons, to $2 up to 200,000, and after that $2.45.

THE STEEP INCREASE after 60,000 gallons would affect about 300 wealthy residents who use excessive amounts of water for swimming pools or underground sprinkling systems.

Parkash said his association plans to study and discuss the proposed increases.

"We will probably decide to take a stand against the change unless the village can convince us that they have looked at every other possible way of coming up with the money needed to make up the deficit," he said.

Parkash said Schaumburg residents are being caught by surprise with "drastic" increases for the average family.

THE VILLAGE finance committee has been studying water rate increases since March. The new rate structure was detailed in a water rate analysis completed by Deputy Village Treasurer Bill Stafford last week.

Tom Murphy, president of the Sheffield Manor condominium area's corporate board, said her association also intends to study the proposed increases.

Mrs. Murphy said she is getting fed up with increases in the cost of "just about everything."

"Everyone goes out for an increase because they see everyone else doing it," she said.

AND MRS. MURPHY agrees with Parkash about the rate rewards for conservation. "I agree water is scarce, but paying more for it doesn't make it any more plentiful," she said.

Chris Pappas, a partner in the Lancer Steak House Restaurant, 1450 E. Algonquin Rd., said he is "not happy" about the proposed increases or the effect they would have on his restaurant.

"The cost of water and other utilities is becoming astronomical but we are like a bunch of sheep. We have to follow because there is no alternative," Pappas said.

Pappas said his restaurant would "probably absorb from within" the increased cost of water rather than passing the higher charge on to customers.

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

by PETER J. SHAW

GLIMMEN, The Netherlands (UPI)—Dutch troops backed by Starfighter jets stormed a hijacked train and an elementary school to end the ordeal of 56 hostages who had been held by Moluccan gunmen for 20 days.

As the firing ceased, some of the hostages aboard the train were seen walking to waiting ambulances.

The attack began at dawn and heavy machine gun fire could be heard along with the boom of heavier weapons as the jets roared overhead.

THE ATTACK followed the breakdown of attempts by Moluccan mediators to negotiate a settlement with the gunmen who are seeking the independence of their island homeland from Indonesia and have demanded a getaway plane, and the release of 21 Moluccan prisoners.

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come from within the train. However, the four-coach express remained intact.

There were no immediate reports of casualties but stretchers were taken directly to the train.

The use of jets and mortars with what seemed to be blank ammunition apparently was meant to intimidate and confuse the gunmen. At least six F104 Starfighter jets crisscrossed above the train at a height of no more than 50 feet, their afterburners glowing red in the deep blue morning light.

The first plane streaked straight down the tracks toward the train and barely cleared the roof.

THE ASSAULT came as a complete surprise. There had been heavy military movement during the night, but this died down as dawn approached, and no one expected an attack once it was already getting light.

Marines with blackened faces appeared out of the dense mist rolling across the flat pastureland to launch the assault.

There was heavy machinegun fire, then the planes appeared and a series of booms was heard.

After a short lull, three bright flashes were seen inside the train but there was no sound. The only sign of damage to the train seemed to be broken windows.

Less than an hour after the attack, streams of ambulances began ferrying survivors to a special medical reception post at the Academic Hospital at Groningen. They traveled a long road cleared of all traffic.

At the school, at least four armored cars were engaged in the assault and automatic weapons fire was heard. Marines were later seen at the school raising their fists in a gesture of victory and shouting, "Hurray, hurray."

After about 10 minutes the action appeared to have died down. Reporters and photographers at other vantage points said the train seemed undamaged and they did not think there was any shooting inside the carriages.

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Ray escapes from prison

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI)—James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, broke out of the maximum security Brushy Mountain prison in a hail of gunfire Friday night, triggering a massive manhunt.

A spokesman in the governor's office at Nashville said Ray and six other men "went over the wall" at about 8 p.m. EDT.

"The escape occurred during the evening recreation period," according to Brooks Parker, a spokesman for Gov. Ray Blanton.

"THE PRISONERS escaped using a homemade ladder made out of lightning conduit (wire). One has been captured and there are still six at large. One of them is James Earl Ray."

The one recaptured was injured as he went over the wall. Bank robber Jerry Ward was shot by guards and taken to Oak Ridge Hospital.

FBI agents, not waiting for an invitation, rushed to the fortress-like prison buried in the Tennessee mountains 40 miles northeast of Knoxville near Oak Ridge.

"Warden Davis informs me that the search underway is made up of 125 correctional officers, 10 highway patrolmen, two FBI men on the scene, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation agents and local law enforcement officers from Morgan County," said Parker.

"AT THE PRESENT time, prison bloodhounds are in pursuit of three of the six escapees. The warden is having a standby team of dogs brought in."

King was felled by a single shot as he stood on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn., on the evening of April 4, 1968.

An intensive manhunt soon focused on Ray, then a fugitive from the Missouri State Prison. He was arrested at London's Heathrow Airport on June 5.

On March 10, 1969, after shuffling through several attorneys and winding up with noted defense lawyer Percy Foreman, Ray entered a guilty plea and was sentenced to 99 years. There was no testimony.

Almost from the moment he entered prison, Ray began protesting his conviction, saying his attorneys railroaded him. He claimed he was working for a man named "Raoul," who he thought was a gunrunner, and had been set up to take the blame for the killing.

The government claimed he killed King with a rifle aimed through the bathroom window of a flophouse. The rifle was found in a bag by the door of the building.

Ray's efforts for a new trial were rejected by one court after another, although there were many unexplained facets to the case such as where he got the money to flee to, and around, Europe after the killing.

Union official denies police quitting fight

William Hogan, Teamsters Union Local 714 pres. Friday denied that some Palatine patrolmen may be having second thoughts about joining the union.

"They're restless because they want us to do something but I wouldn't say they're getting cold feet," he said.

Hogan's comments were in response to rumors circulating in the police department and in the village that some patrolmen are considering dropping their attempt to affiliate with the Teamsters.

"I can sympathize with them," Hogan said. "They've been waiting since November and I can understand their feelings."

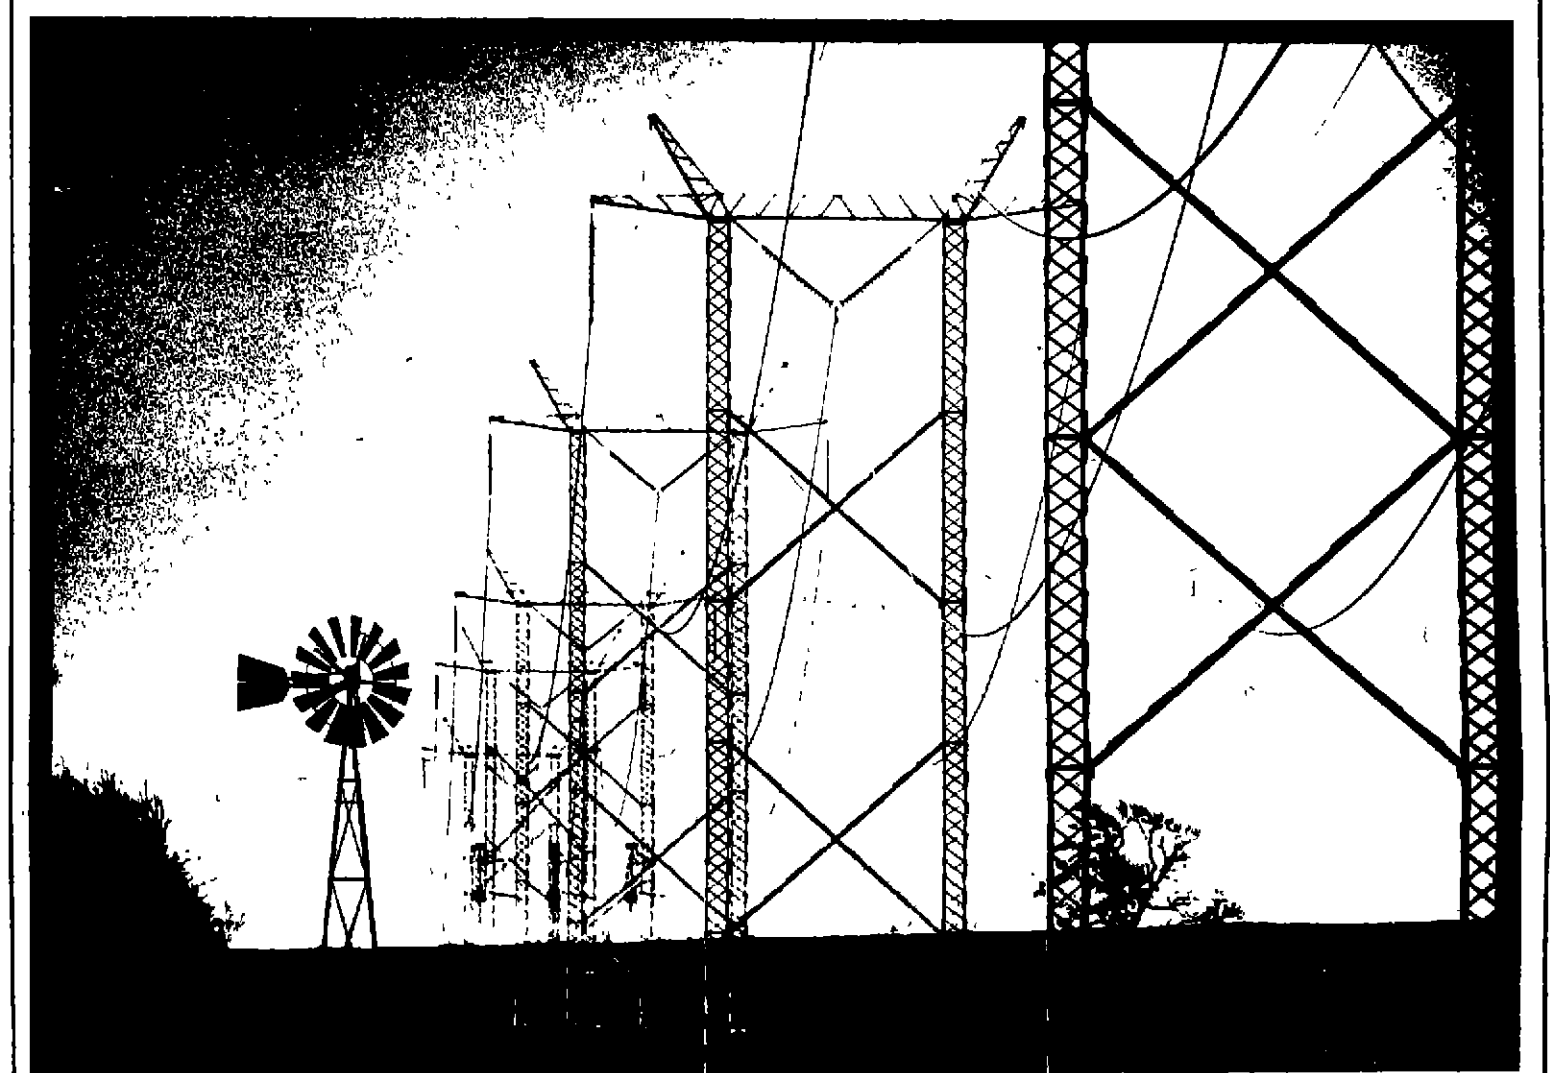

PATROLMEN VOTED 33 to 3 to join the union last fall but the village board in January voted to deny the Teamsters recognition. Public works employees in March also announced they were affiliating with the Teamsters and the board in April again voted to deny recognition.

Patrolmen have declined to talk about their union activity because of a department rule that says all discussion of department activity must first be cleared through the police chief.

Hogan said he is aware that some patrolmen may be getting impatient with the delay but he said he has assured the men that the union is firm in its stand of gaining recognition on behalf of the employees.

HE SAID HE has agreed to meet with the patrolmen if they want a meeting. Hogan said he would go over the union's plans and activities as of

WINDMILLS WERE bringing power to the Midwest long before electrical power lines were installed. And before

that they were used to pump water on farms. Today's wind generators are slimmer and many are mounted on rooftops. They aren't a common sight yet, but many people say the winds are one source of power that will have to be tapped.

Search for energy tilts to windmills

by LYNN ASINOF

A lot of people chuckled when Illinois Schools Supt. Joseph Cronin suggested that state schools might someday be powered by windmills.

But a visit to Plum Brook, Ohio would make the chucklers think twice. There stands the country's largest wind generator, with twin blades 125 feet across. It can produce 100 kilowatts of electricity when the wind blows at 18 miles per hour.

Built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation in 1975, the wind generator is considered a first step.

IT IS PART of the government's push to explore the use of large wind generators to produce low-cost electricity. The Energy Research and Development Administration estimates that wind will provide 1,000 megawatts of electricity by the year 1985, equivalent to 0.5 per cent of the nation's total projected energy needs.

In the next two years, the government will build four large machines. This year alone, it will spend $20.5 million on windpower research, and 30 per cent of that will be spent on large wind generators.

But most people probably will feel the effects of windpower from another direction — the small wind generators mounted on rooftops.

That's the approach taken by the 11th Street Movement in New York City, a low income neighborhood group that has rebuilt a burned-out tenement.

WITH A government grant, the group installed a $4,000 windmill that can produce 2,000 watts of electricity an hour. That's not enough to power the entire building, but it will produce enough to cut the electric bill for common areas of the building by one-third.

The 11th Street Movement bought a rebuilt Jacobs windmill from Windworks, a technological community 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. It is one big source of information on windpower systems.

Started in 1970 under the direction and sponsorship of R. Buckminster Fuller, Windworks began experimenting with simple wind machines for the homebuilder.

"The homebuilding approach was fine as an educational tool," (Continued in Section 2, on Page 6)

Solar heat energy wave of the future

Solar energy is a boom business. Small companies have sprouted like weeds bearing names like Sunworks, Mr. Sun, Solar-Aire and Helio-Dynamics.

Many of the companies have put lots of research into their product, others are fly-by-nighters. But all are anxious to cash in on the new alternative energy campaign, and many are finding they can't handle all the business coming their way.

Just ask Stephen Miller, who founded Amcon Inc., a Carbondale firm that produces complete solar air systems. Just 1½-year-old, Amcon was started because Miller couldn't find the equipment he needed on the market.

"I WAS A contractor and we had some clients come in wanting to have a solar home built," Miller said. "We took a look at what was on the market. That was in 1973-74. Then we set about to design our own system."

Today Miller says he can't keep up with the business. "We're by no means set up to handle the influx of inquiries we have right now," he said, noting he's gotten letters from every state in the U.S., not to mention a string of foreign countries including Liberia, Germany and Israel.

The solar industry is doubling in size every nine months based on the amount of solar collector plates sold, said Sheldon Butt, president of the Solar Energy Industries Assn. But the industry is still in its infancy and Butt says there will be many changes before it stabilizes.

Right now, most solar industries are small businesses. Butt said that creates built-in problems since the companies often don't have needed organizational or marketing skills.

"LARGELY WHAT you find today is the founder of a company is a good technical man who sat down and designed himself a good product and now he doesn't know what to do with it," Butt said.

Although there is a tremendous market for solar products, often the solar companies have a hard time getting their product in the public eye. They don't have enough time to develop good public relations, and that is one reason why it is hard to get information on solar products.

The Federal Energy Administration publishes a list of companies active in solar energy, but Butt points out that the FEA often has trouble finding the smaller companies.

Judge Sirica orders Gould to pay itself $200,000

by ROBERT KYLE

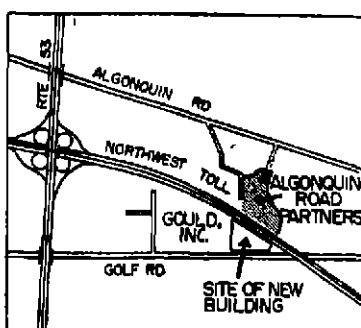

It began more than two years ago with a corporate decision to expand.

It ended this week in a Washington, D.C., courtroom when U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica ordered top officials of Gould Inc. to sell a 32-acre tract in Rolling Meadows and to pay at least $200,000 to their own company, even if it means taking money from their own pockets.

Along the way came a complex real estate deal where four Gould officials, their attorney and their real estate agent used a "straw person" to inflate the price of a piece of land sold to the company while reducing the price of a tract they bought for themselves.

THE GOULD OFFICIALS are not saying much about Sirica's order or the Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of the transaction. One principal, Gould Chairman William T. Ylvisaker, issued a statement saying he agreed to the settlement without admitting any violations of the law and only to avoid "time-consuming, expensive litigation and delay."

From the company's headquarters

in Rolling Meadows, publicist Marianna Durk said there will be no discipline for the employees involved in the transaction.

"They didn't do anything wrong," she said. "The only thing was the failure to disclose."

The SEC also aimed its complaint against the failure of Ylvisaker and Gould financial vice president Edwin C. Parker to tell the company's board of directors about their dealings. The agency's complaint simply outlines the facts of the land deals, facts, an attorney says, that will never be tested in court.

The SEC paints this picture: In January 1975 Ylvisaker instructed Illinois Development Corp., Gould's real estate agent, to negotiate for a seven-acre triangle on the south side of the Northwest Tollway at Golf Road. The triangle was part of a 39-acre tract — the rest lies north of the tollway.

IDC OFFERED $280,000 at first, then $300,000, then $325,000 and finally $350,000, the price determined by an appraiser hired by the owners.

The owners were ready to accept that price only if Gould provided access to the landlocked 32-acre parcel north of the tollway. Negotiations came to an impasse over the question of access in September 1975.

In December IDC told Gould that the easiest way to acquire the seven-acre triangle was to buy the entire 39 acres for $1.4 million. IDC then recommended that Gould sell the property north of the tollway to finance the entire deal.

William D. Sanders, IDC president, told Ylvisaker in January that the land was worth more than $1.4 million. Sometime around the first of March, Sanders and Ylvisaker began talking about buying the 32-acre tract as an investment of their own.

IDC THEN AGREED to buy the entire 39-acre tract through a "straw person" who was to divide the land between Gould and a newly formed group called the "Algonquin Road Partners" — Ylvisaker, financial vice president Parker, Gould president Daniel Carroll, another unidentified Gould officer, attorney Thomas A. Reynolds Jr. and seven IDC employees.

The SEC does not know it, but the new partnership jelled at about the same time that the City of Rolling Meadows, at IDC's urging, solved the problem of access to the 32-acre tract.

It was in December 1975 or January 1976 that IDC first approached the city about using a city-owned easement running south from Algonquin Road, recalls City Engineer James J. Muldowney. In April, the city council agreed to build a street and a bridge if the developer paid the $185,000 cost.

The SEC does know that the deal began to fall into place in May when a bank approved "more than 100 percent financing" for the land.

GOULD ENDED UP paying $940,000 for the seven-acre triangle that had been appraised at $350,000. Instead of the appraised price of $1 million, the new partnership paid $460,000 for its 32 acres.

Immediately, the partnership put that parcel on the market for three times the purchase price.

In July, the SEC says, Gould's planning manager, Jack E. Jackson, voiced his concern that the firm may have paid too much for its land. For the second time, Gould president Carroll urged that Ylvisaker explain the transaction to Gould's directors.

The directors did not learn of the transaction, though, until August when Ylvisaker sent them a "misleading" letter that said the partnership had paid the appraised price for its land.

THE SEC'S LAST entry is dated Oct. 15, 1976: the Algonquin Road Partners offered to sell the land to Gould's directors for $460,000. At the same time, Ylvisaker, in his capacity as chairman and chief executive officer, recommended that the offer be refused.

Mrs. Durk and planning manager Jackson said the SEC complaint will have no impact on the firm's plans to build a new 10-story building near the tollway.

The future of the 32-acre parcel is not as clear. IDC originally had talked about luring a large corporation to the site. City Engineer Muldowney says he's seen plans for a residential subdivision.

But, in addition to extracting a promise that Gould, Ylvisaker and financial vice president Parker will adhere to the SEC's disclosure regulations, Sirica's order says that the Algonquin Road Partners must sell their land.

Gould is to receive at least $200,000 of the proceeds, the agreement says, even if that means a loss for the partnership. If the land is sold at a profit, all of the profit must go to Gould. According to the agreement the partnership is to receive no more than the $460,000 they paid for the land.

Staley appointed to fill park post

Barbara Staley, 38, of 3811 W. Fremont, Rolling Meadows, this week was appointed to the Salt Creek Park Board to fill a vacancy created by the resignation May 31 of Comr. Thomas Menzel.

Mrs. Staley was selected for the post over Mary Ann Heiberger, 637 S. Warren St., Palatine, the only other park district resident who applied for the vacancy. She will serve until the next park election in 1978.

Park Board Pres. Walter Peppler said Mrs. Staley was chosen to fill the vacancy after the board took a second vote to break a 2-to-2 deadlock.

THE BOARD used paper ballots, so it is not known which commissioner changed his vote.

Menzel resigned from the board to devote his time to an aldermanic seat he won in April on the Rolling Meadows City Council. He had recommended that Mrs. Staley succeed him on the board.

Mrs. Staley and her husband, Murton, campaigned for John Ungerman, an incumbent commissioner, of Rolling Meadows in the April 19 park board election. Ungerman defeated Mrs. Heiberger. As a write-in candidate, Mrs. Heiberger was the third highest vote-getter of five candidates vying for two seats on the board.

Mrs. Staley will be sworn in at the park board meeting Tuesday.

The Salt Creek Rural Park District, which includes part of Palatine, Rolling Meadows and the Arlington Park Race Track, has Winston Park area representatives in addition to the two Rolling Meadows commissioners. Siegmar Olaf Schneider and Patrick Greulich are from the Winston Park area, while Peppler lives in the Rose Park section of the park district in Palatine.

'Police aren't quitting on union'

now and for the future. Some of the union's strategy, Hogan has said, will include distributing leaflets in the village and a possible newspaper campaign to explain the union's position.

Hogan said he still is hopeful a collective bargaining bill now before the Illinois Senate will pass.

The bill, House bill 2, would grant municipal employees collective bargaining rights. The measure passed the House last month and was referred this week to a subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Commerce committee.

Hogan, who attended a committee hearing on the bill Thursday, said he will know more about the bill's status on Monday.

THE BILL IS acknowledged to be a pro labor measure and is opposed by several communities, including Palatine.

"I think there's still a ray of hope and I still feel it's got some chance (of passage)," Hogan said. "We want to ride this out to see what happens."

He admitted that Chicago Democrats, who usually back labor-oriented legislation, are not strongly supporting the bill.

"We're putting a certain amount of pressure on them because labor wants this bill passed," Hogan said.

Hogan said he would like to see some type of collective bargaining measure passed even if it is a watered-down version of House Bill 2. "We want to get some guidelines and we think that's the way we should be going," he said.

Further Senate subcommittee hearings on House bill 2 are expected next week.

Police to sponsor bicycle registration

Palatine police, in cooperation with the Palatine Park District's recreation day, will sponsor a bicycle registration from 1 to 5 p.m. today at the Palatine Mall, Northwest Highway and Hicks Road.

Police also will engrave valuables which can be brought to the mall. Persons who wish to have valuables engraved should bring a driver's license so the number can be used for the engraving.

Dutch troops, jets rush terrorists

by PETER J. SHAW

GLIMMEN, The Netherlands (UPI)—Dutch troops backed by Starfighter jets stormed a hijacked train and an elementary school to end the ordeal of 55 hostages who had been held by Moluccan gunmen for 20 days.

As the firing ceased, some of the hostages aboard the train were seen walking to waiting ambulances.

The attack began at dawn and heavy machine gun fire could be heard along with the boom of heavier weapons as the jets roared overhead.

THE ATTACK followed the breakdown of attempts by Moluccan mediators to negotiate a settlement with the gunmen who are seeking the independence of their island homeland from Indonesia and have demanded a getaway plane, and the release of 21 Moluccan prisoners.

Dutch officials said the assault on the train came at the same time as a similar attack on a nearby school where another bank of Moluccan gunmen were holding four teachers as hostages.

There was a bright red flash near the train shortly after the assault began and a few minutes later three large explosions appeared to come from within the train. However, the four-coach express remained intact.

There were no immediate reports of casualties but stretchers were taken directly to the train.

The use of jets and mortars with what seemed to be blank ammunition apparently was meant to intimidate and confuse the gunmen. At least six F104 Starfighter jets crisscrossed above the train at a height of no more than 50 feet, their afterburners glowing red in the deep blue morning light.

The first plane streaked straight down the tracks toward the train and barely cleared the roof.

THE ASSAULT came as a complete surprise. There had been heavy military movement during the night, but this died down as dawn approached, and no one expected an attack once it was already getting light.

Marines with blackened faces appeared out of the dense mist rolling across the flat pastureland to launch the assault.

There was heavy machinegun fire, then the planes appeared and a series of booms was heard.

After a short lull, three bright flashes were seen inside the train but there was no sound. The only sign of damage to the train seemed to be broken windows.

Less than an hour after the attack, streams of ambulances began ferrying survivors to a special medical reception post at the Academic Hospital at Groningen. They traveled a long road cleared of all traffic.

At the school, at least four armored cars were engaged in the assault and automatic weapons fire was heard. Marines were later seen at the school raising their fists in a gesture of victory and shouting, "Hurray, hurray."

After about 10 minutes the action appeared to have died down. Reporters and photographers at other vantage points said the train seemed undamaged and they did not think there was any shooting inside the carriages.

As the sky lightened, the firing ceased and columns of armored cars, armored personnel carriers and jeeps moved off toward the train. In the early-morning light, the train seemed undamaged.

About 15 minutes after the firing died down, large numbers of passengers were seen leaving the train and walking to a Red Cross emergency post nearby where ambulances were arriving to collect them.

Ray escapes from prison

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI)—James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, broke out of the maximum security Brushy Mountain prison in a hail of gunfire Friday night, triggering a massive manhunt.

A spokesman in the governor's office at Nashville said Ray and six other men "went over the wall" at about 8 p.m. EDT.

"The escape occurred during the evening recreation period," according to Brooks Parker, a spokesman for Gov. Ray Blanton.

"THE PRISONERS escaped using a homemade ladder made out of lighting conduit (wire). One has been captured and there are still six at large. One of them is James Earl Ray."

The one recaptured was injured as he went over the wall. Bank robber Jerry Ward was shot by guards and taken to Oak Ridge Hospital.

FBI agents, not waiting for an invitation, rushed to the fortress-like prison buried in the Tennessee mountains 40 miles northeast of Knoxville near Oak Ridge.

"Warden Davis informs me that the search underway is made up of 125 correctional officers, 10 highway patrolmen, two FBI men on the scene, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation agents and local law enforcement officers from Morgan County," said Parker.

"AT THE PRESENT time, prison bloodhounds are in pursuit of three of the six escapees. The warden is having a standby team of dogs brought in."

King was felled by a single shot as he stood on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn., on the evening of April 4, 1968.

An intensive manhunt soon focused on Ray, then a fugitive from the Missouri State Prison. He was arrested at London's Heathrow Airport on June 5.

On March 10, 1969, after shuffling through several attorneys and winding up with noted defense lawyer Percy Foreman, Ray entered a guilty plea and was sentenced to 99 years. There was no testimony.

Almost from the moment he entered prison, Ray began protesting his conviction, saying his attorneys railroaded him. He claimed he was working for a man named "Raoul," who he thought was a gunman, and had been set up to take the blame for the killing.

The government claimed he killed King with a rifle aimed through the bathroom window of a flophouse. The rifle was found in a bag by the door of the building.

Ray's efforts for a new trial were rejected by one court after another, although there were many unexplained facets to the case such as where he got the money to flee to, and around, Europe after the killing.

Kids, teachers reluctant to leave school

by HOLLY HANSON

In honor of the last day of school, second-grade teacher Fran Higley gave her students packs of gum, a treat that has been forbidden all year.

It was a way to make the last day at Sunset Park special, and exchanging gifts — from red roses for a teacher to chocolate cupcakes for friends — was the order of the day at the school, 603 W. Lomquist Blvd., Mount Prospect, which closed Friday.

With homework and spelling tests long finished for the year, teachers and students spent the last day playing quiet games, sharing summer plans and trading autographs and telephone numbers.

EVEN AFTER students had received their report cards and been turned loose for the summer, many remained, snapping pictures of their teachers and friends and clustering to chat near the school's doors.

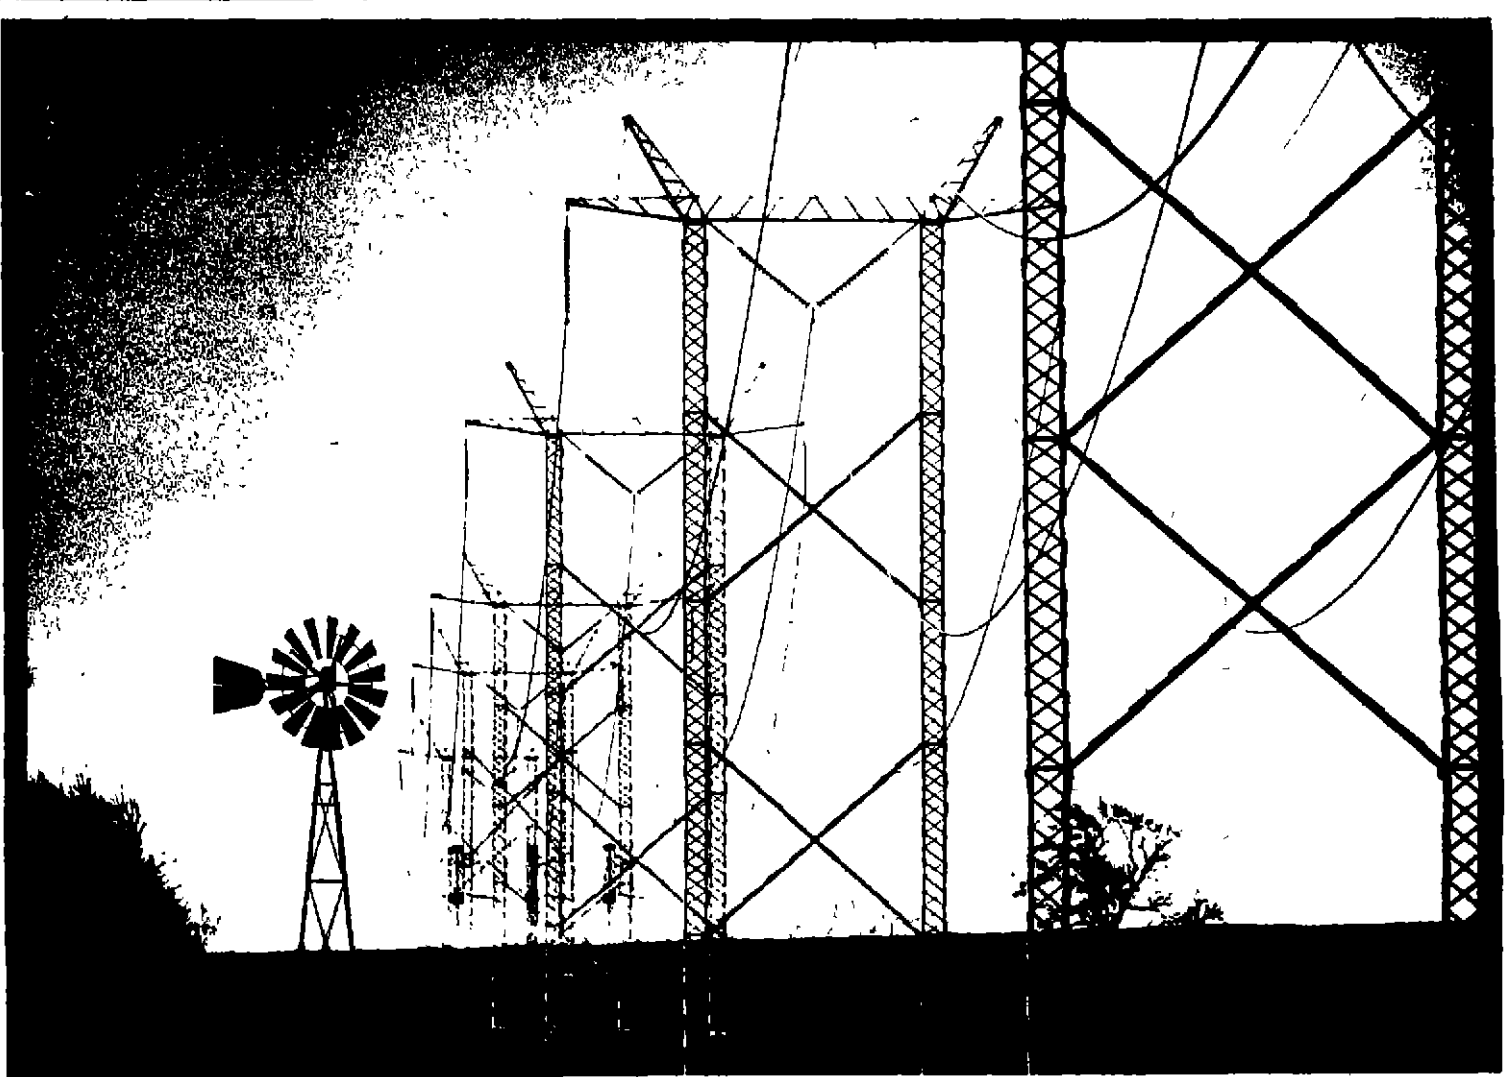

The school was closed because of dwindling enrollment, and the building already has been leased to a church group.

In the fall, the Sunset Park students will go to either Lions Park or Westbrook schools, and many of their teachers will follow them to the other buildings.

Several first graders were overjoyed to learn their teacher was going with them to their new school, until they realized that she will continue to teach first grade while they will move on to second grade.

But the move to the other schools has been made a little easier because

WINDMILLS WERE bringing power to the Midwest long before electrical power lines were installed. And before that they were used to pump water on farms. Today's wind generators are slimmer and many are mounted on rooftops. They aren't a common sight yet, but many people say the winds are one source of power that will have to be tapped.

Search for energy tilts to windmills

by LYNN ASINOF

A lot of people chuckled when Illinois Schools Supt. Joseph Cronin suggested that state schools might someday be powered by windmills.

But a visit to Plum Brook, Ohio would make the chucklers think twice. There stands the country's largest wind generator, with twin blades 125 feet across. It can produce 100 kilowatts of electricity when the wind blows at 18 miles per hour.

Built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation in 1975, the wind generator is considered a first step.

IT IS PART of the government's push to explore the use of large wind generators to produce low-cost electricity. The Energy Research and Development Administration estimates that wind will provide 1,000 megawatts of electricity by the year 1985, equivalent to 0.5 per cent of the nation's total projected energy needs.

In the next two years, the government will build four large machines. This year alone, it will spend $20.5 million on windpower research, and 30 per cent of that will be spent on large wind generators.

But most people probably will feel the effects of windpower from another direction — the small wind generators mounted on rooftops.

That's the approach taken by the 11th Street Movement in New York City, a low income neighborhood group that has rebuilt a burned-out tenement

WITH A government grant, the group installed a $4,000 windmill that can produce 2,000 watts of electricity an hour. That's not enough to power the entire building, but it will produce enough to cut the electric bill for common areas of the building by one-third.

The 11th Street Movement bought a rebuilt Jacobs windmill from Windworks, a technological community 35 miles southwest of Milwaukee. It is one big source of information on windpower systems.

SUNSET PARK SCHOOL

SAYING GOODBYE for the last time is hard, especially when you have to leave your best friends. Teacher Camille Oldenburg tries to console Cathy Vais as students leave Sunset Park School for the last time Friday. The school, 603 W. Lonnquist Blvd., Mount Prospect, has been closed because of declining enrollment, and next fall its students will go to nearby Westbrook and Lions Park schools.

LIONS PARK and Westbrook students were paired with Sunset students to give them tours of the schools and to share hamburger lunches with them.

"They found out their new schools have classrooms and playgrounds and drinking fountains, just like Sunset," Sunset Principal Walter Olds said.

Second grader Doug Dornek, who will be going to Lions Park, said he doesn't mind changing schools so much, now that he knows what the new one will be like.

"One thing I really like about Lions Park is the big gym, and you can go skateboarding there," he said. "And Mr. Guthrie (Principal Robert Guthrie) is really nice."

CLASSMATE HEATHER Olson, who will be going to Westbrook, has found an unexpected advantage to going to a school that is not so close to home. She said she thinks it will be fun to ride the bus every day.

Sixth-grade teacher Muriel Taylor, with 12 years at Sunset, said she has special memories of the building because she has been there longer than any other teacher.

"It's my first and only school in Mount Prospect, and I have many fond memories," she said. "The parents have been fantastic, and we have a cohesive, cooperative faculty. I'll miss it."

Olds said he's unhappy to see the building close because it has meant an end to the Sunset Park "society," which has become a close-knit group over the years.

And teacher Esther Baker, who came to Sunset when it opened in 1959, spent several years at Lions Park and the last six at Sunset, said the closing is sad, but she's not sorry about it.

"It has to be," she said. "The small enrollment here was not good educationally. At the new schools, it will be better for the children and the teachers."

Clarification

A story in The Herald Wednesday on Prospect Heights' new noise ordinance said major building construction is limited to between 6 a.m. and sunset Monday through Saturday.

However, that restriction applies only to professional builders. Do-it-yourselfers can work from 7 a.m.-10 p.m. everyday of the week.

Hersey band takes first

The Hersey High School marching band of Arlington Heights received two first-place awards in parade competition Saturday at the Harvard Milk Festival in Harvard.

The band, under the leadership of director Donald Caneva and assistant director Jim Rich, received the "Outstanding Band of the Day" award and the first place trophy for class AA school competition.

High school bands from Illinois and Wisconsin participated. It was the sixth appearance of the Hersey band in the Harvard Milk Festival and the sixth time it has won double honors.

Goldblatt's looking at several sites

Goldblatt's officials say they will build a department store in or near Mount Prospect but not necessarily in the Mount Prospect Plaza where fire destroyed their store in February.

"It's our intention to continue to serve the Mount Prospect area and we are looking at several sites," said Albert Dolin, executive vice president for Goldblatt's.

Dolin said his firm is considering relocation at several sites other than the plaza, Rand and Central roads, but has not ruled out the shopping center. "We'll be able to tell you something in a week to 10 days," he said.

THE ABSENCE OF Goldblatt's from the plaza has caused concern by owners of several smaller businesses in the shopping center. They say without a large store that attracts more people, their sales are declining and unless a department store such as Goldblatt's comes to the center the plaza could go out of business.

Meanwhile, village officials have been told by the owners of the shopping center that demolition of the Goldblatt's ruins is expected to begin the week of June 20. However, the owners, National Shopping Centers Management Corp., Rye, N. Y., have not yet sought a permit to raze the building.

"I'm anxious to get it down," Village Mgr. Robert J. Eppley said. "The permit application for demolition is expected shortly."

A spokesman for National Shopping Centers would neither confirm nor deny whether Goldblatt's will be rebuilding in the plaza. They have said several prospective new tenants have inquired about the vacant space in the shopping center.

Mayor Carolyn H. Krause agreed with Eppley that the Goldblatt's remains are an "unsightly thing" and should be removed for both safety and esthetic reasons. "The initial step is to have that demolished and then moved away," Mrs. Krause said. "My understanding is they are going to do so. I want that out of there."

Although Goldblatt's officials said they are looking in or near Mount Prospect for a construction site, Mrs. Krause said she does not know of any vacant property in the village currently zoned for commercial use, and large enough for a department store. "For that size, I can't think of any place available."

Mrs. Krause said one possible location for a Goldblatt's store might be at Ill. Rte. 83 and Golf Road, where last year a National Food Store went out of business.

Prospect Heights seeks counsel

Prospect Heights has begun a search for legal firms to represent the city, a move which could result in replacement of City Atty. Donald Kreger.

Ald. Fred Gilman has been directed by the city council to review legal firms which could advise the council. Kreger is a partner in Kreger and Carlton Ltd., Chicago. His firm has served as the council's legal counsel on a month-to-month basis since last June.

PREVIOUSLY THE firm was retained by the Prospect Heights Improvement Assn. to provide legal service during the group's incorporation efforts. The city incorporated in January 1976.

Aldermen periodically have expressed dissatisfaction with Kreger's work. The last time discontent surfaced was in February, but the council decided to take no action at that time.

"We've had discussions in the past," Wolf said, explaining the council's move to interview law firms.

However, he said Kreger's firm will be considered along with any others when the council determines who should be contracted for city legal services.

"WE WANT to become aware of what is available," Wolf said.

The city may choose two law firms because it needs both a city attorney and a prosecuting attorney, he said.

"Basically Kreger feels it isn't good for the prosecuting attorney and city attorney to be the same person," he said. "If you have someone working in administration, it's hard to put them in the enforcement end at the same time."

Kreger now serves as both prosecuting and city attorney.

The council approved a change in Kreger's fees Monday. He will be paid a $500 fee each month he is retained as attorney, plus $60 an hour for preparation of ordinances and $500 a day for trials.

Previously, he was paid $1,820 a month, including all legal services.

Gilman is expected to complete his review of Kreger and the search for other law firms within a month.

How to save energy, money topic of talk

How to save energy and money at the same time will be discussed by experts in a three-part series beginning Tuesday at Prospect Heights Public Library.

The series, entitled, "Since When Do You Have Money to Burn," will deal with insulation products and methods, heat pumps and solar heating for homes.

Jack Vaughn, consultant to Owens-Corning Fiberglas, will present a film and discussion of insulation at the first of the series, which begins at 7 p.m. in the library, 12 N. Elm St.

There also will be a question and answer period. The second of the series is 7 p.m. June 21 and the third is 7:30 p.m. June 28, both at the library.

The series is free, but Librarian Joyce Armington asks that those planning to attend register by calling 259-3500.

Basnik to chair zoning panel

Gilbert B. Basnik, 903 Golfview Pl., has been appointed by Mayor Carolyn H. Krause to succeed her as chairman of the Mount Prospect Zoning Board of Appeals.

Basnik, 51, has been on the zoning board for nearly 10 years. He is an investment securities dealer.

Mrs. Krause served as zoning board chairman from 1973 until her election as mayor in April. In addition to filling the vacancy on the zoning board created by her election, Mrs. Krause must appoint nine persons to fill positions on seven village advisory boards and commissions.

Vacancies exist on the downtown redevelopment commission, board of health, insurance commission, drainage and clean streams commission, zoning board of appeals, planning commission and finance commission.

Saturday, June 18, Leisure answers the age-old question: "Mom, what can I do?"

Summertime and the livin' isn't always easy if the kids are bored, underfoot and out of activities. Turn to The Herald for help. Our June 18 Leisure magazine is a special section that will feature a lineup to keep them in line:
